ENCOURAGED by the warm reception accorded to their maiden work, viz., the Commentary on the Code of Civil Procedure, and the unprecedented success which the work had in going through two Editions within a couple of years, the Authors have launched on a similar commentary on this, the next important and largely used enactment in the Indian Statute Law.

The aim of the Authors has been, as in the Code of Civil Procedure, to collect all the decisions of the Privy Council and of the several superior Courts in India and Burma and to point out the principles of law underlying them. Such principles of law deduced from the vast mass of decisions have been classified under different headings, prefixed to the commentary under each section, and have been presented in a logical and cogent manner. Wherever there is a conflict of opinion in the decisions of the several courts, care has been taken to point out the conflict, to discuss the question on first principles, to test the several conflicting decisions on such first principles and to offer definite opinions thereon. No pains have been spared in suggesting solutions for the many difficulties that arise in the daily practice and which are covered neither by the provisions contained in the enactment nor by the voluminous case-law. The applicability of the general principles to the facts of particular cases have been indicated by remarks in brackets against the particular decision in the foot-note; the remarks thus amplify and add to the commentary. This, it is hoped, will enable the practitioners to pick out the particular ruling applicable to the case on hand without much difficulty.

The particular page of the report where the discussion of law is found in each decision has been indicated in brackets immediately after the citation.

Since decisions bearing on the earlier enactments on the subject have been cited, the corresponding sections of the earlier enactments have been given in the foot-notes under each section, so that the decisions may be easily understood in the light of the language of those enactments.

The Code has been amended considerably by the amending Acts of 1923. The changes effected in each section by such amendments have been indicated by printing such portions in italics. Wherever it is necessary to show the difference between the language of the earlier section and the change effected by the Acts of 1923 the two sections have been given in parallel columns.

The Authors trust and hope that this work will receive the same generous support as their work on the Code of Civil Procedure.

The Authors feel grateful to Mr. R. Narayanaswamy Ayyar, B.A., B.L., Advocate and Proprietor, "The Madras Law Journal" Press, Mylapore, for the keen interest he has taken in bringing out this work with the neat execution and get-up that is characteristic of his Press.

1. Preamble—General.—The purpose for which a preamble is framed is to indicate in general terms the object and the intention of the legislature in passing an Act.[1] The language of preamble cannot, however, be availed of to control the provisions of an enactment so as to restrict or widen the import of the express terms of a section when such terms are clear and unambiguous.[2] The reason is that so far as a Code deals specifically with a point it must be deemed to be exhaustive and the law must be ascertained with reference to its provisions[3] which, when clear and unambiguous, must always prevail against the preamble.[4] But when the language of the section is ambiguous or doubtful[5] or where there is nothing in the express provisions of the Act to the contrary[6] the preamble may be taken into consideration to interpret the enactment. See also Note 8 below.

2. "Consolidate and amend".—The Code of Criminal Procedure provides for a machinery for the punishment and prevention of offences against the substantive criminal law.[1-a] The aim of the Legislature in codifying the law of procedure is to lay down the law in specific and clear language without leaving it in doubt for the Judge or the litigant[1] and the object of consolidation is, firstly, to collect all the statutory law bearing on a particular subject in order that the Code may be exhaustive on matters specifically dealt with therein.[2] A consolidating Code is intended to be self-contained and its meaning is not to be left to be ascertained by roaming over a vast number of prior decisions of Courts.[3] Secondly, such a Code is also intended to be up-to-date and to lay down the law as it exists on the date of the enactment. Any consideration as to the previous state of the law will, therefore, be entirely irrelevant in construing the language of the Code which must always be given its plain meaning.[4] In the case of consolidating and amending Act a reasonable interpretation of its provisions is the only means of determining whether any particular section is intended to consolidate or amend the previously existing law.[5]

3. Retrospective operation of the Code.—It is a general principle of law that no statute shall be construed so as to have a retrospective operation unless its language is such as plainly to require such a construction;[1] in fact a apply[7] unless there is an indication to the contrary in the Act.[8]

Such indications can be found in the following circumstances:—

(1) When the commencement of the Act is postponed to a particular day. The object of the postponement is to enable persons to enforce their rights, if any, before the new Act comes into force, negativing such rights.[9]

(2) When the language of the enactment implies it.

4. Code, if and when exhaustive.—The Code is exhaustive on all matters specifically dealt with by it. The law in such matters must be ascertained only with reference to its provisions and a Judge cannot disregard or go outside the letter of the enactment according to its true construction in the view of the Judge.[1]

But the absence of any provision on any particular matter does not mean that there is no such power.[2] It is a rule of construction of every statute, that the Court ought not to act on the principle that every procedure is to be taken as prohibited unless it is expressly provided for, but should proceed on the converse principle that every procedure is to be understood as permissible till it is shown to be prohibited by law.[3]

The Code is thus not exhaustive of all forms of procedure necessary to be used in the administration of justice.[4] For instance where a Court had a power before the Code was passed and the same is not taken away by the Code, the power remains.[5]

Preamble, Note 5.

The Court's function in fact, is to say, not what the Legislature meant or ought to have meant but what it has said it meant.[9] It is always dangerous to paraphrase an enactment even if badly worded.[10]

Where, however, the language of the enactment is not itself precise or is ambiguous or of doubtful import or the question arises as to what extent changes in the pre-existing law have been effected by any particular amendment, recourse may be had to extraneous considerations.[11] Thus the provisions of other statutes which are in pari materia[12] or the previous state of the law,[13] or the scope and intention of the Act[14] may be considered.

Subject to the broad principles mentioned above, the following general rules of interpretation of statutes should also be borne in mind in construing the sections of the Code—

(1) Where an Act is divided into sections and rules, the section must be taken to lay down general principles and the rules as providing the machinery or means of applying them.[15] or two procedures are provided for, one must not be taken as operating in derogation of the other.[19]

(3) Everything is to be taken as permissible unless there is some prohibition against it.[20] In the case of consolidating statutes the statute itself must be consulted in order to find the authority for the prohibition.[21]

(4) Where the statute is not clear, a reasonable construction should be adopted.[22] A construction which leads to an absurd result[23] or produces injustice[24] or defeats the object of the Act itself[25] should, if possible, be avoided.

(14) A change in the language of the present Code from that of the old Code may be presumed to indicate a change of intention on the part of the Legislature.[41] But it is also a recognised presumption that the Legislature does not intend to make any alteration beyond what it expressly declares[42] and where the language used is doubtful no change will be deemed to have been made.[43]

(15) Where a question arises as to whether any particular provision is mandatory or directory, the general test is the relation which the provision has to the general object intended to be secured by the Act.[44] Another test has also been applied and that is to see whether a party may waive the benefit of the particular provision.[45] In deciding the question, the Court should take into account the possibility of justice suffering from a too rigid application of the rule.[46]

(16) Words in singular should be read as including the plural unless there is anything in the context to the contrary.[47]

(17) Forms given in the schedule do not control the clear words of the Code itself.[48]

6. Reference to pre-existing state of the Law.—It follows from the principles set forth in Note 2 above that where the language of a statute is plain and clear it cannot be qualified or neutralised by indications of intention gathered from previous legislation.[1] In the leading case of Bank of England v. Vagliano

Bros.[2] Lord Herschell observed as follows: "I think the proper course is, in the first instance, to examine the language of the statute uninfluenced by any considerations derived from the previous state of the law, and not to start with inquiring how the law previously stood, and then, assuming that it was probably intended to leave it unaltered, to see if the words of the enactment will bear an interpretation in confirmity with this view".

But where the language is not clear or the statute has made no provision for any particular case, the previous legislation may be referred to for the purpose of ascertaining the object and intention of the legislature.[3]

Preamble, Note 7.

7. Reference to proceedings of the Legislature.—In the case of The Administrator-General v. Prem Lal Mullick,[1] their Lordships of the Privy Council have laid down definitely that it is not competent to refer to the proceedings of the Legislature as legitimate aids to the construction of the statute.[2] This is in consonance with the principle that where the language is plain no extraneous matters should be taken into account in the interpretation of the Act.

Preamble, Note 7.

The undermentioned cases in India, before the date of the Privy Council decision, which had taken the view that such proceedings could be always referred to in aid of the construction of statutes, cannot be considered to be good law after the date of the said decision.[3]

Where the language is doubtful or ambiguous, such proceedings may of course be looked into.[4]

The proceedings of the Legislature will include:—

(1) The Statement of Objects and Reasons,
(2) Report of the Select Committee,
(3) The Draft stages of the Bill, and
(4) The Debates of the Legislature.

Preamble, Notes 8—9.

8. Reference to Preamble and Headings.—Where the language of the enactment itself is clear, then under the general principles set forth in Note 2 above, its construction cannot be affected in any way by a consideration of the preamble or the headings prefixed to the sections.[1] In cases of ambiguity of the language of the enactment however, they may be usefully referred to for the purposes of finding out the object and intention of the enactment.[2] See also Note 1, above.

9. Marginal Notes to Sections.—It is now settled that marginal notes to sections do not form part of the statute itself and cannot be referred to for explaining or construing the section.[1] In Bulraj Kunwar v. Jagatpal

Singh[2] their Lordships of the Privy Council observed as follows:—"It is well settled that the marginal notes to the sections of an Act of Parliament cannot be referred to for the purposes of construing the Act. The contrary opinion originated in a mistake and it has been exploded long ago. There seems to be no reason for giving the marginal notes in an Indian statute any greater authority than the marginal notes in an English Act of Parliament."

In the undermentioned cases,[3] however, a view has been expressed that where there is ambiguity in the section the marginal note can be referred to for solving the ambiguity. There was no reference in those cases to the said Privy Council decision or to the subsequent decisions in India following it. Those cases therefore cannot be considered to be good law.

10. Illustration.—Illustrations, unlike marginal notes, are to be considered as part of the statute itself.[1] They are to be accepted, if that can be done, as being both of relevance and of value, in the construction of the section.[2] The rule, however, is subject to two limitations:—

(1) Any illustration only exemplifies the section and cannot be taken to restrict the sense of the section.[3]

(2) Where the illustration is in conflict with the main section, the illustration must give way to the section.[4] But it would require a very special case to warrant its rejection on the ground of its assumed repugnancy to the section itself.[5]

11. Punctuation Marks.—Before the year 1849, the English Acts of Parliament were not punctuated by any stops and the then accepted rule of interpretation was that such marks could not be relied upon in construing Acts of Parliament.[1] In Maharani of Burdwan v. Krishna Kaminee Dasi,[2] which was a case under the old Bengal Regulation of 1819, their Lordships of the Privy Council, held presumably, applying the English rule that, "it is an error to rely on punctuation in construing Acts of the Legislature."

Preamble. Notes 11—12.

Since the constitution of the regular Legislatures in India, however, the practice has been to insert stops in Bills before the Legislature and to retain them in the authentic copies of the Acts signed by the Governor-General and published in the Gazette of India.[3] There has, however, been a conflict of view. The Madras and Bombay High Courts have held that the punctuation marks must be taken as part of the statute itself and construed accordingly,[4] while the Allahabad and Calcutta High Courts have held the contrary view[5] following the English rule.[6] This conflict would now appear to have been set at rest by the Privy Council in Lewis Pugh v. Asutosh Sen[7] where their Lordships, in interpreting Arts. 48 and 49 of the Limitation Act, observed that a Court is bound to read those articles without the commas inserted in the print. See also the following cases.[8]

12. Proviso.—A proviso is subordinate to the main enactment[1] to which it is appended either to allay unfounded fears,[2] or as a condition precedent to the enforcement of the operative clause,[3] or for explaining what particular matters are not within the meaning of the enactment, or for providing exceptions and qualifications to the enactment.[4]

A proviso should be taken together with the language of the previous portion of the enactment[5] and construed in the ordinary manner.[6] As a general rule it must be taken to govern the main proposition of law which immediately precedes such proviso, unless the language of the statute shows a different intention.[7]

Preamble, Notes 12—13.

But in no case can a proviso extend or enlarge the operative effect of the substantive portion, unless there is an ambiguity therein.[8]

13. Judicial Precedents.—Judicial precedents constitute an important guide to the proper interpretation of statutes. It is a general principle of construction of statutes that the Courts should follow existing rulings so as not to upset or disturb existing and settled practice[1] unless such practice is clearly contrary to an express enactment or is inconsistent with it.[2] This rule is based, in the case of statutes enacting substantive law, on the ground that otherwise it would embarrass trade and commerce, affect the status of persons and unsettle

But it is necessary that the Courts should ascertain the facts with accuracy before turning their attention to the authorities.[7] They should also bear in mind the rule that a decision is applicable only to the facts of that case[8] and is only an authority for what it actually decides and not for every proposition that may seem to follow logically from it.[9] The only use of the authorities or decided cases is the establishment of some principle of law which the Judge can follow in deciding the case before him.[10] There can be no precedent on questions of fact and matters of discretion.[11] Nor can the dicta of Judges, however eminent, be cited as establishing authoritatively propositions of law unless such dicta form the integral part of the train of reasoning directed to the real questions decided.[12]

Subject to the principles mentioned above, the following rules may be remembered—

(1) All Courts in India are bound by the decisions of the Privy Council.[13] A considered conclusion of the Privy Council cannot be ignored as being obiter.[14]

In the case of different views among the High Courts on any point of law, the view of the Privy Council, even if obiter, is to be adopted.[15]

(2) A single Judge of the High Court is bound by the decisions of a Bench of two or more Judges[16] and a Bench of two or more being not expressly excluded by the Indian statute.

16. Conflict with other Laws.—Where the language of an Indian statute is clear, the statute is to be administered as it stands, even though it might conflict with international law.[1] An Indian Law is not invalid because it conflicts with the English Law, or any other system of law; and it is not open to the Courts to vary the effect of plain and unambiguous words to avoid such a conflict.[2] Without prejudice to the foregoing rules it may be stated that the legislature is presumed not to enact anything contrary to international or common law.[3]

17. Scheme and arrangement.—Where the language is ambiguous it is permissible to construe the provisions of a particular section with reference to the scheme and arrangement of the Act.[1] It has been held that the division into chapters is an organic feature of the Criminal Procedure Code[2] and that all the sections falling under one chapter must be interpreted as having reference exclusively to matters within the purview of that chapter.[3] In fact, the separation of chapters is of such importance that it was considered necessary to re-enact for purposes of one chapter the provisions already laid down in another.[4] But, since all the provisions of an Act must be construed harmoniously, it is permissible to interpret a doubtful point occurring in one part by a consistant reference to the express provisions on similar points in other parts of the Act.[5]

18. Interpretation Clause.—It has been seen already[1] that, as a general rule of construction, words in a statute should receive their ordinary and plain meaning unless a contrary intention is apparent from the statute. Where, therefore, a statute provides a definition or an interpretation clause the question arises as to how far the plain or primary meaning of words is superceded by the statutory definition. It cannot, certainly, be that the legislature intended, by a definition clause, to prevent the operation of a word in its primary or obvious sense under all circumstances.[2] The real object of the definition clause, on the other hand, is to include in the connotation of a word certain things which the legislature, under certain circumstances, intends to include but which may not fall within the ordinary acceptation of the term.[3] If, therefore, the subject or context renders the special meaning given by the definition clause less applicable than the ordinary meaning, the definition clause cannot preclude the ordinary construction. The definition clause will thus be applicable unless a different intention appears from the subject or context.[4] Though the definition clause is always controlled or limited by any specific provisions in the same Act[5] a definition given in another statute not in pari materia[6] or the incidents attached to the word by another statute[7] cannot be made applicable except so far as provided by the Act itself.[8] See also Notes to Section 4.

19. "Means and includes".—The word "includes" used in a definition clause is not intended to be exhaustive of the things denoted by the word defined. It is a word of extension. By 'including' certain things in the definition others are not thereby excluded.[1] But when a definition exhaustive of the signification of the word is intended, the expression 'means'[2] or 'means and includes'[3] is used.

20. "May".—Prima Facie the word 'may' is an enabling word; but under certain circumstances enabling words may have a compulsory force.[1] The question in each case must be solved aliunde and in general, from the context, the particular provisions or the general scope and object of the enactment.[2]

21. Amendments.—Where there is an amendment to a statute the question is whether it affects the determination of a particular matter and not whether such matter is excluded from its operation.[1] Where, therefore, the provisions of the old statute are not referred to in the amending statute, they must be considered irrespective of the amendment.[2] But where new provisions are substituted for old ones the former alone should be looked to for construing the matter dealt with by them.[3]

22. Construction of a Penal Statute.—A penal statute must be construed strictly;[1] that is to say, nothing is to be regarded as within the meaning of the statute which is not within the letter or which is not expressly and intelligibly described in the very words of the statute itself.[2] As a penal statute affects the liberty of a subject, it must be construed, in case of doubt or ambiguity in the language, in favour of the subject.[3] No liability should be held to

23. Rules and bye-laws.—Rules and bye-laws framed under a statutory power for carrying out the objects of the statute are a part of it provided the rules and bye-laws are intra vires.[1] But if they are in excess of the statutory power, unreasonable or repugnant to the statute they are ultra vires.[2] Rules and bye-laws cannot extend the scope[3] or affect the construction[4] of the Act. They must be strictly construed.[5]

24. Recognised construction.—A construction placed by a competent legislature in a latter statute upon the provisions of an earlier statute is binding even though erroneous; because though such an erroneous opinion does not make the law, it may be so declared as to operate in future.[1] But the interpretation long put upon an enactment by persons whose duty it is to construe, execute and apply the law while having no binding force on Courts may, in case of ambiguity, be given due weight and not simply disregarded.[2]

25. Repeal.—An earlier statute will be considered to have been repealed by a later one only if there are express words to that effect.[1] Repeal by implication cannot be assumed unless the two Acts are so plainly repugnant to each other that effect cannot be given to both of them at the same time.[2] This rule holds good even in cases where the earlier is a special Act and the later one general Act.[3] Where a subordinate Legislature, authorised to rescind, vary or modify the legislation of a superior legislature, intends to do so it must be done only expressly.[4]

Where the provisions of a statute are, by reference, incorporated into another, the subsequent repeal or amendment of the provisions in the former statute will not have the same effect in the latter statute unless expressly stated.[5]

A proceeding taken against a person under a temporary Act, like an ordinance, will ipso facto terminate on the expiry of the Act.[6] Penalties, however, that have been incurred while a statute is in force, are not, in the absence of an express provision to the contrary, affected by the mere fact that the statute has ceased to be in force.[7]

26. "Judicial discretion".—The law in many instances leaves certain matters to the discretion of the Court. The discretion, in such cases must not be exercised in an arbitrary, vague or fanciful manner, but on judicial principles.[1] Again where there is no indication in the Act or rules of the grounds to refuse trial of an offence where one has been committed.[3] In criminal trials the duty of the Court is more onerous than in civil cases. While in civil cases the Court will decide on the evidence that the parties choose to produce, it is the duty of a Judge, in a criminal case to see that all relevant evidence is brought before it.[4]

2. Extent—British India.—Crime being in its essential nature local[1] the British Indian Courts have jurisdiction to try any person for an offence committed within their respective jurisdictions in British India.[1-a] In exceptional cases, however provision has been made for dealing with offences committed outside British India.[1-b] Whenever, in either case, the criminal law is set in motion in British India the law of procedure applicable is the Code of Criminal Procedure, subject to any special or local law or special jurisdiction as mentioned in this section.

The expression British India has been defined in S. 15 of the Indian Penal Code as the territories which are or may become vested in His Majesty by the statute 21 and 22, Vic. Ch. 106 entitled 'An Act for the better Government of India'. This is the definition applicable to the Code of Criminal Procedure by virtue of Sub-section 2 of section 4 of this Code. See also the definition in the General Clauses Act, 1897.[2]

The transfer of a part of the British Territory in which an offence was committed, to a Native State will not affect the jurisdiction of a British Indian Court to proceed with an appeal[20] or with the trial[21] in a case validly pending before it on the date of such transfer. Nor does the transfer of one district from one Presidency to another in British India prevent the Criminal Procedure Code from operating therein or deprive the accused of his rights under the Code.[21-a]

Territorial Waters.—This expression denotes that part of the sea extending from the seashore to a distance of a marine league (three miles). This area is within the territorial limits of the state on which it abuts and is part of it for purposes of jurisdiction.[22]

The High Seas.—The High Seas are those parts of the seas which are beyond the limits of the territorial waters. It is a recognised principle of International Law that a ship on the High Seas is a floating island belonging to the state whose flag it is flying. By virtue of British Parliamentary Statutes extended to operate in British India[23] the British Indian Courts have jurisdiction to try liability to punishment under the Penal Law is not taken away by the fact that powers of departmental punishment have been exercised.[3] The power of granting or dismissing a claim for compensation under S. 45 of the Bombay City Police Act (1902), given to the Chief Presidency Magistrate is as persona designata and not as a Criminal Court and consequently no revision or appeal from his order lies under the Criminal Procedure Code.[4]

7. Police at Calcutta, Madras and Bombay.—This section bars the application of the Code to the Police in the presidency towns of Madras, Bombay and Calcutta.[1] It does not bar its application to a Magistrate who is not a police officer; for example, the Presidency Magistrate.[2] The Code itself expressly makes certain sections applicable to the police at Calcutta, Madras or Bombay as for example S. 55 which applies to the police in the town of Calcutta.[3]

Various special Police Acts for the respective Presidency Towns govern the Police therein.[4]

8. Village Headman in Madras.—The powers and duties of the village Headman in the Presidency of Madras are mainly provided in various Madras Acts and Regulations.[1] Clause (c) of sub-S. (2) of this section lays down that nothing in the Code shall apply to the village headman, that is to say, References to Code of Criminal Procedure.

In every Act passed before this Act, the expressions "Officer exercising the powers of a Magistrate," "Subordinate Magistrate, First class," and "Subordinate Magistrate, Second class," shall, respectively, be deemed to mean "Magistrate of the First class," "Magistrate of the Second class," and "Magistrate of the Third class," as defined in this Act.

References in former Acts.

1. References to Criminal Procedure Code.—Sub-S. (1) makes a formal provision in the nature of an interpretation clause. References to sections of the repealed Code have to be taken to be made to the corresponding provisions of the present Code. For example, S. 2 of the Reformatory Schools Act of 1876, repealed S. 318 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1872 in provinces where the former statute came into force. After the passing of the Code of 1882 the corresponding reference would be to S. 399 of that Code.[1]

Sec. 3, Notes 1—2.

2. Expression in former Codes.—The provision contained in Sub-section (2) is rendered necessary by the modifications made in the present Code in the constitution and designation of various Criminal Courts in Chapter II.

Thus the expression "Officer invested with full power of a Magistrate" in the Public Gambling Act, III of 1867, means a Magistrate of the first class.[1] The expression "authorised to exercise any of the powers of a Magistrate" in the Calcutta Port Act, 1890, has been held to apply to a Presidency Magistrate under S. 20 of the Code.[2] The words "Magistrate of Police" in the Workmen's Breach of Contract Act, XIII of 1859, mean the 'Presidency Magistrate'.[3] The words "Subordinate Magistrate of the first or second class" occurred in Aden Act 1864.[4] A Joint Sessions Judge under the Code of 1882 became an Additional Sessions Judge under the Code of 1898 without a fresh appointment.[5]

1. Definitions—General.—Section 4 is an interpretation clause. Its legitimate function is to declare that certain words and expressions used in the Code shall have the meaning given to them by the definition thereof. It is not intended to annex to such words or expressions every incident which may seem to be attached to them by any other Act of the Legislature.[1] The meaning assigned to a word by this interpretation clause is the meaning of the word wherever it occurs in the Code[2] unless a different intention appears from the subject or context. Thus the definition of the word "complaint' does not include a Police report. But a report made by the police may be a 'complaint' by a public servant within the meaning of S. 195.[3] Again "High Court" within the meaning of S. 195, sub-S. (6) as it stood before 1923, did not include a single Judge sitting on the original side though the words as defined in this section will not exclude such Judge.[4]

When a definition 'includes' certain persons or things it does not exclude other persons or things not so included.[5] The word 'includes' is a phrase of extension and generally used in order to enlarge the meaning of the words or phrases occurring in the body of the Code.[6] When it is intended to exhaust the

1. Charge—What is.—A charge is a precise formulation of the specific accusation made against a person who is entitled to know its nature at the earliest stage.[1] It denotes a charge formulated after inquiry as distinguished from the popular meaning of the word as implying inculpation of a person for an alleged offence as used, for instance in S. 224 of the Penal Code.[2]

Under the Code of 1882 there was no definition of the word "charge" and there was difference of opinion, as to whether it meant only a single head of charge or the whole indictment of several counts.[3] The present definition now makes it clear that a charge may include more heads than one.[4]

SYNOPSIS.

	Note No.
POLICE OFFICER	2
SECOND SCHEDULE OR UNDER ANY LAW FOR THE TIME BEING IN FORCE	4

1. Scope.—

Offences and cases are divided into two broad classes:—

(1) Cognizable offences and cognizable cases, i.e., those offences for which, and those cases in which, a police officer may arrest without a warrant from a Magistrate in other words, cases of which a police officer, as such, can take cognizance.

(2) Non-cognizable offences and non-cognizable cases, i.e., those offences for which and cases in which a police officer may not arrest without a warrant: in other words, cases of which, a police officer, as such, cannot take cognizance.[1]

The first class of offences come under this definition. For the second class, see S. 4 (1) (n).

2. Police officer.—The words "a police officer" do not mean "any and every" police officer. An offence is cognizable even if the offender can be arrested without warrant only by a particular class of police officers.[1]

As to police officer, see clause (p), infra.

3. "May arrest without a warrant".—The power of arrest referred to here, must be an unqualified power and not a conditional power[1-a] as where a police officer can arrest without warrant only—

(1) if the accused does not furnish security under S. 24 of the Opium Act I of 1878[1];

(2) if a report had been made of the commission of the offence under S. 60 of the U.P. Excise Act (IV of 1910)[2];

(3) if he is specially authorised by the Commissioner of Police, under S. 10 of the Bombay Prevention of Prostitution Act (XI of 1923).[3]

[But see (1932) 1932 Bom. 610 (610), Raghunath Lahamsa Walvekar v. Emperor (Where the decision rests on another ground, vide Note 4). Also 1935 Rang. 181 (182): 13 Rang. 130, Htwin Htin v. Emperor (Where the view was doubted).]

Consequently the above cases cannot be said to be cognizable cases. Sec. 4 (f), Notes 3—4.

4. Second schedule or under any law for the time being in force.— The cases in which or the offences for which a police officer may arrest without warrant are shown in column 3, Sch. II of the Code. An offence is cognizable only if it comes under that schedule or is one for which, under any law for the time being in force a police officer may arrest without warrant.

The first two columns under the heading "offences against other laws", in Sch. II show that a police officer may arrest without warrant only for those offences for which the punishment is imprisonment for 3 years or upwards. Thus an offence under S. 19 (f) of the Arms Act which is punishable with imprisonment for 3 years is a cognizable offence.[1] An offence under S. 4 of the Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act IV of 1887[2] or under Chapter VII of the Excise Act of 1881[3] or under S. 29 of the Police Act 1861[3-a] punishable with imprisonment for less than 3 years is not a 'cognizable one'.

The words "or under any law for the time being in force" have reference only to such offences "which are punishable with imprisonment for less than three years but are specified as offences for which the police may arrest without a warrant, that is, offences which but for the special provision would not, under the Code, be "cognizable" offences as for example offences made 'cognizable' under S. 131 of the Railways Act (IX of 1890).[4] The words mentioned above are wide enough to include an express or implied provision of any law or enactment.[5]

"Commissioner of Police." (g) "Commissioner of Police" includes a Deputy Commissioner of Police. Sec. 4(g).

"Complaint". (h)* "Complaint" means the allegation made orally or in writing to a Magistrate, with a view to his taking action under this Code, that some person, whether known or unknown, has committed an offence but it does not include the report of a police officer.

*[CODE OF 1882—S. 4 (1) (a)].

"Complaint." (a) "Complaint" means the allegation made orally or in writing to a Magistrate, with a view to his taking action under this Code, that some person, whether known or unknown, has committed an offence; but does not include the report of a police officer.

1. Legislative history.—The word 'complaint' was for the first time defined in the Code of 1882 under S. 4 (1) (a). The definition has been retained in this clause without any change.[1]

2. Scope of the definition.—In order to constitute an allegation a complaint within the meaning of this definition,

(1) such allegation must be made to a Magistrate;

(2) it must be made with a view to his taking action under this Code.[1-a]

A "complaint" must be distinguished from "information".

"The essential difference between a complaint and information is that a Magistrate acts on a complaint, because the complainant has asked him to act, but a Magistrate acts on information on his own initiative. In the case of a complaint the Magistrate is asked to prosecute the person named as accused, and he has then to decide whether he will accede to the request or not. If he does not, then he must record his reasons under S. 202, infra, and may make an enquiry himself or direct an inquiry or investigation or dismiss the complaint under S. 203 after recording reasons. But in the case of receiving information, the Magistrate is not asked by any one to issue process and if he does not choose to act on the information he need not record any reason or pass any order. In the case of information there is no complainant to be examined on oath.

Section 4 (1) (h)—Note 1.

(1884) 1884 P. R. Cr. 8, p. 10, Mangal Singh v. Empress (Petition of an Excise Officer, though addressed to the Deputy Commissioner, presented to a Magistrate, is a complaint).
(1904) 1 Cri. L. Jour. 671 (673), Nga Ba v. Emperor (Deputy Commissioner directing a Kunwun to make inquiry—He submitted a report that there was a prima facie case against the applicant—The report held to be a complaint).

'On a complaint, the complainant is first examined on oath unless it has been made by a public servant acting in the discharge of his official duty.'"[1] Sec. 4(h), Notes 2—3.

The following further points of distinction between a complaint and information may also be noted:—

(1) Third class Magistrates cannot be empowered to take cognizance upon information. S. 190, sub-S. (3).

(2) When cognizance is taken by a Magistrate upon information, the accused may claim a transfer of the case to some other Magistrate or commitment to the Court of Sessions—S. 191. The word 'complaint' must be interpreted throughout the Code wherever it occurs to mean a 'complaint' as defined under this section.[2]

Though generally Magistrates take cognizance of a cognizable offence upon a Police Report, yet there is nothing in the definition of 'complaint' which requires it to be made only in a non-cognizable case.[3]

In criminal cases, though the complainant brings the facts to the cognisance of those charged by the Crown to administer justice, it is the Crown who prosecutes in vindication of his peace.[4]

3. Form of complaint.—There is no particular form in which the complaint should be made. It is sufficient if the complainant lays before the Magistrate, matter which, if proved would constitute an offence. It is the substance of the complaint that is to be regarded. Thus the heading of the complaint[1] or the use of a wrong printed form[2] is immaterial. It is not also necessary that the complaint should state precisely the section of the Penal Code under which the accused should be charged. It is enough if the facts alleged would constitute the offence for which the accused is charged.[3] It does not matter even if the complaint quotes a wrong section.[4]

Allegations not stated in the complaint do not form part of a complaint.[6] So a statement made by a complainant in his examination under S. 200, infra[7] or as a witness[8] cannot amount to a complaint.

A complaint should allege facts but it is not necessary to allege all the facts on which the accused is to be charged.[9] It must contain such facts in a concise and certain language which, if relied upon, will constitute the offence charged. A complaint in which no facts are set out but only the words of the section are copied is not a compliance with the requirements of the law.[10]

4. 'Joint complaint'.—See S. 200, Note 19, infra.

5. Who may complain.—Any person having knowledge of the commission of an offence may set the law in motion by complaint even though he is not personally injured or affected by the offence, as nothing in the Code confines prosecutions to persons directly injured.[1] Nor is it necessary that the person making the complaint should have personal knowledge of the facts complained

7. Statement in complaint, if privileged.—The question whether a statement made in a complaint, if defamatory; is privileged may arise—

(1) in Criminal prosecutions under S. 499, Penal Code;

(2) in civil suits for damages.

1. If a party to a judicial proceeding is prosecuted for defamation in respect of a statement therein, his liability must be determined with reference to the provisions of S. 499, Penal Code; and not otherwise. Consequently a person in such a position is entitled only to the benefit of the qualified privilege mentioned in S. 499 of the Penal Code. He will be protected only if the statement was made in good faith.[1]

2. If the complainant is sued in a Civil Court for damages, for defamation in respect of a statement made in the complaint his liability, must be determined with reference to principles of justice, equity and good conscience, which have been interpreted to mean the rules of English Law so far as they are applicable to Indian society and circumstances; under that law, such a statement is absolutely privileged and the same will hold good in this country also.[2]

S. 4 (1) (h), Notes 8—9

8. 'To a Magistrate'.—The complaint must be made to a Magistrate as such. So where a petition was presented to the Police and on the report of the Police the Magistrate passed orders, such orders are illegal as the case is one not instituted on a complaint.[1] Petitions made to a Collector as head of the Court of Wards[2] or otherwise,[3] or to an officer in his executive capacity[4] or to a Village Magistrate who is not a Magistrate under the Code[5] or to a Civil Court, by a means of obstruction to execution[5-a] are not complaints. A complaint by a Magistrate to his own Court, is one made to a Magistrate and is not illegal.[6]

9. "With a view to his taking action".—The test to decide whether an allegation amounts to a complaint is to see whether it is made with a view to the Magistrate's taking action under the Code.[1] Whether in any particular case the allegations were made with such a view depends upon the facts and circumstances of that case. An express request to that effect is not necessary.[2]

The following have been held not to amount to complaints by reason of their not having been made with a view to action being taken by the Magistrate:—

to prove his case[32] or that the complaint should be inquired into[33] or to have the petitioners his witnesses summoned and examined.[34]

10. "Under the Code".—The action that is sought to be taken must be under this Code. So where an allegation is made to a Magistrate with the object of inducing him to take action under the Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act it does not amount to a complaint of an offence, as defined in this section.[1]

11. "That some person, has committed an offence".—The complaint must allege that an offence [as defined in S. 4-1 (o)] has been committed; where therefore no offence is disclosed upon the facts contained in the petition, there is no complaint[1].

An act in respect of which a complaint may be made under S. 20 of the Cattle Trespass Act, 1871, was not included in the word "offence" in the Code of 1882, and it was held that a request for action against such acts was not a complaint".[2] Such acts would now, under the present definition clearly be "offences".[2-a]

Section 41 of the Bombay District Police Act does not make the use of a house as a brothel, an offence, for it is not punishable. A complaint under that section therefore is not one as defined in this section.[3] Again, a proceeding under S. 113, Railways Act, to recover excess charge, is not a prosecution for a criminal offence.[3-a] Applications for action under S. 107,[4] S. 110,[5] S. 133,[5-a] and S. 145[6] and petitions for maintenance under S. 488[7] are not complaints as the allegations in support thereof do not amount to an offence as defined in clause (o).

12. "Some person known or unknown".—The definition under this section includes a complaint that some person or persons unknown have committed an offence.[1] So it is not necessary that the complainant should name all the accused persons[2] or specifically and in terms accuse any particular person of an offence[3] or each person with a particular offence.[4]

A Magistrate having taken cognizance of a complaint can also proceed against other persons who, though not mentioned in the complaint, appear to have been concerned in the commission of the offence.[5]

13. "Report of a Police Officer".—The "report of a Police officer" is not a complaint.[1] There is however a conflict of opinion as to the meaning of the expression "report of a Police officer", see S. 190, Notes 20 and 21.

14. Limitation.—There is no limitation for preferring a complaint of a criminal offence[1-a] unless the penal law creating the offence prescribes any period within which a complaint may be made in respect thereof.[1]

1. Scope of the definition.—The son of an Indian born at Constantinople cannot claim to be a European British Subject merely because of his birth in Europe unless he proves that his father or grand father was domiciled in the British Islands or in any colony.[1]

In order to sustain the plea of a British born subject not only the legitimate descent of the accused but also the nationality of his father or grand father, as the case may be, must be proved.[2]

(i) any subject of Her Majesty born, naturalised or domiciled in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland or in any of the European, American or Australian Colonies or possessions of Her Majesty, or in the Colony of New Zealand, or in the Colony of the Cape of Good Hope or Natal;

(ii) any child or grand-child of any such person by legitimate descent.

The words "Naturalised" or "domiciled" which follow the word "born" are disjunctive and not conjunctive. In other words, it is not necessary that the applicant, in order to come under the definition should, besides being an European British subject by birth, also be domiciled at the same time in the British Islands or in any colony. Therefore an European British woman who marries a native British Indian husband or a subject of an Indian State does not cease to be an European British subject by reason of her marriage or of her domicile in the Native State.[3] S. 4 (1) (i), Note 1.

1. Legislative Changes.—The Code of 1861 defined the words "enquired into" as comprising every proceeding preliminary to trial and the word "determined" as comprising trial and every subsequent proceeding. The Code of 1872 defined "inquiry" as including any inquiry conducted by a Magistrate or Court under the Code; "inquired into" as meaning every proceeding preliminary to trial, and "trial" as meaning proceedings taken in Court after a charge had been drawn up.

Under the Code of 1882, "inquiry" was defined as including every inquiry conducted under the Code by a Magistrate or Court, but the word "trial" was not defined. It was, however, held that "inquiry" did not include trial, though some doubt was expressed as to this.[1] The present definition makes it clear that an inquiry does not include a trial.[2]

[CODE OF 1872—(S. 4, Paras 5 to 8).]

"Inquiry." — "Inquiry" includes any inquiry which may be conducted by a Magistrate or Court under this Act.

"Inquired into." — "Inquired into" means and includes every proceedings preliminary to trial.

"Trial." — "Trial" means the proceedings taken in Court after a charge has been drawn up, and includes the punishment of the offender.

It includes the proceedings under chapters XVI and XVIII, from the time when the accused appears in Court.

"Enquired into." "Determined." — 9. The words "enquired into" shall be deemed to comprise every proceeding preliminary to trial; and the word "determined" to comprise trial, and every subsequent proceeding, including the punishment of the offender.

S. 4 (1) (k), Note 2.

2. "Inquiry".—This definition is really an explanation of the term as used in the Code[1] and is not exhaustive.[2] The word "inquiry" must be distinguished from 'investigation' under Chapter XIV[3] on the one hand, and a 'trial'[4] on the other.

An inquiry is different from an investigation in the following particulars:—

(1) An inquiry must be by a Magistrate or Court whereas an investigation is by a police officer or any person other than a Magistrate or Court.[5]

(2) The object of an inquiry is to determine the truth or falsity of certain facts in order to take further action thereon, while the object of an investigation is to collect evidence.[6]

An inquiry is different from a trial in the following respects:—

(1) A 'trial' is a judicial proceeding which ends in conviction or acquittal. All other proceedings are enquiries which have various endings according to circumstances.[7]

(2) The word 'trial' as used in the Code pre-supposes the idea of an offence[8] while an 'inquiry' does not merely mean an inquiry into an offence, such as is contemplated by Chapter XVIII[9] but extends into matters which are not offences, e.g., proceedings under Sections 117,[10] 145[11] and 514[12] of the Code, or under the Workmen's Breach of Contract Act, 1859.[13]

(3) The term 'inquiry' is not confined to proceedings in which an accused is actually placed before a Magistrate on a charge for an offence. It is meant to include everything done in a case by a Magistrate whether the case has been challaned or not.[14] Thus it will include an inquiry under S. 159, made by the Magistrate in order to ascertain whether an offence has been committed and if so whether any person should be put on his trial[15] or an inquiry by a Magistrate under S. 176, into the cause of death[16] or an inquiry under S. 202, into the truth or falsity of a complaint, before issuing process against the accused[17] or the recording of a statement under S. 164.[18] As to whether an 'inquiry' referred to S. 337 infra is one that is covered by this section or not there is a difference of opinion. The Bombay High Court[19] holds that inquiries could only mean inquiries held "under the Code" and not inquiries in a popular sense and as the Code mentions no inquiry to ascertain whether a certain person is willing to accept the terms on which a pardon is offered to him, such an inquiry if made, will not be one conducted under the Code. The High Court of Lahore[20] and the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind[21] however, held, that "inquiries" include all inquiries other than trials and when a case has been reported to a Magistrate by the Police, and he is asked to tender a pardon and does so, there is an "inquiry" within the meaning of the S. 337 of the Code.

An inquiry under S. 465 of the Code as to the state of mind of the accused is only an "inquiry" and not a "trial".[22]

3. "Trial".—The term 'trial' is not defined in the Code although the Code of 1872 defined it as "a proceeding following a charge, including the punishment of the offender."

The word has no fixed or universal meaning and must be construed with regard to the particular context in which it is used and with regard to the scheme, and purpose of the measure concerned.[1] A 'trial' "generally means the determination of the issues arising in a particular case."[2] It means therefore a proceeding which commences when the case is called on, with the Judge or Magistrate on the Bench, the accused is in the dock, and the representatives of the prosecution, and for the defence, if the accused be defended, are present in Court for the hearing of the case.[3] 'Trial' does not therefore include proceedings where the Court cannot pass final orders but can only report to the High Court.[4]

4. Trial when begins and ends.—'Trials' under Chapter XXIII of the Code, before High Courts and Courts of session commence with the framing of the charge.[1] In a Bombay case[2] it was held that it did not begin with the framing of the charge but only when the accused pleaded or claims to be tried as only then the assessors or jurors were chosen.

In cases before Magistrates in warrant cases, the proceedings are only 'inquiries' up to the time when the charge is drawn up, read and explained to the accused and he pleads thereto. Then the 'inquiry' becomes a 'trial'.[3] In summons cases, before Magistrates, the 'trial' begins when the accused is

It has been held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Basil Ranger Lawrence v. Emperor[5] that a 'trial' means all proceedings including the sentence. No trial can therefore be concluded until judgment and sentence are passed.[6] In view of this decision, the view of the Madras High Court,[7] that the 'trial' is over before the pronouncing of a judgment and sentence and that the sentence is not part of the trial requires reconsideration.

1. Legislative Changes.—The Code of 1861 contained no definition of the expression "Judicial Proceeding". It was defined for the first time in the Code of 1872.

Changes made in the Code of 1882—

(1) Before the word "taken" the word "legally" was added.

(2) The words "or in which any judgment, sentence or final order is passed on recorded evidence" were omitted.

Changes made in the Code of 1898—

(1) The word "includes" was substituted for the word "means".

(2) The words "on oath" were added.

2. Scope and applicability of the definition.—Section 4 (1) (m) does not attempt to give an exhaustive definition of a "judicial proceeding" but is content with declaring that in addition to what are plainly and obviously judicial proceedings, that term, "includes any proceeding in the course of which evidence is or may be legally taken on oath".[1] A judicial proceeding is one of which the object is to determine a jural relation between one person and another, or a group of persons or between him and the community generally[2] or a step taken by a Court in the course of the administration of justice in connection with a pending case.[3] The test whether a proceeding is or is not a "Judicial proceeding" for the purposes of the Code is determined by the fact whether, in the course of that proceeding, the presiding Judge has legally taken evidence on oath or has the power legally to take evidence on oath.[4]

The whole sitting for the disposal of judicial work from the opening to the rising of the Court is a judicial proceeding and the necessary interval between the conclusions of one case and the opening of another is a stage in a judicial proceeding. It cannot be said that the judicial proceedings of a Court in a particular case, are at an end the moment the sentence is passed or an order for security is made. The judicial proceedings continue until the accused is discharged or removed in custody.[5] But where the Judge in the midst of judicial work turns his attention to his executive duties, that stage is not a judicial proceeding.[6]

This definition is not applicable to the Penal Code[7] or the Civil Procedure Code.[8]

3. "Legally".—In Queen v. Gholam Ismail[1] a decision under the Code of 1872, it was held that the words "a proceeding in which evidence is or may be taken" meant "a proceeding in which evidence is or may be legally taken". In consequence of this ruling, the Code of 1882 added the word "legally".

I. Under the Code the following have been held to be judicial proceedings:—

(1) An inquiry for the issue of a search warrant under S. 96[1] or S. 100[2] of the Code.

(2) Proceedings by a Magistrate under S. 117 of the Code.[3]

(3) Proceedings in which a Magistrate comes to a determination as to the fitness of sureties under S. 122.[4]

(4) Proceedings under Chapter X.[5]

(5) Inquiry by a Magistrate before issuing an order under S. 144.[6] The rulings prior to the Code of 1882 held that it was not a judicial proceeding.[7]

(6) Inquiry under S. 145.[8]

(7) Proceedings in which a statement from a witness is recorded under S. 164.[9]

S. 4 (1) (o), Notes 1—3.

(o) *"Offence" means any act or omission made punishable by any law for the time being in force; it also includes any act in respect of which a complaint may be made under section 20 of the Cattle Trespass Act, 1871.

"Offence."

SYNOPSIS.

	Note No.
LEGISLATIVE CHANGES	1
SCOPE OF THE SECTION	2
MADE PUNISHABLE	3
BY ANY LAW FOR THE TIME BEING IN FORCE ..	4
SECTION 20 OF THE CATTLE TRESPASS ACT	5

Civil wrong. See Note 3, Pt. 1-2-a.
Offences—What are and what are not. See Note 2.

1. Legislative Changes.—

This definition was introduced for the first time in the Code of 1882.

Changes made in the Code of 1898—

The words "it also includes.....S. 20 of the Cattle Trespass Act 1871" were new.

2. Scope of the section.—This definition does not govern the definition of offences under other Acts.[1] Nor does it apply where a different intention applies from the subject or context.[2]

3. "Made punishable".—An act or omission is an offence only if it is made punishable by any law for the time being in force.[1] Merely travelling in a train without a ticket or pass is not made punishable, though excess charge may be levied from such passenger. Such travelling is therefore not an offence.[2]

"Offence."

(p) "Offence" means any act or omission made punishable by any law for the time being in force.

Section 4 (1) (o)—Note 2.

(1) [See (1903) 26 Mad. 607 (614, 615, 625), Adams v. Emperor ('Offence' as used in the Extradition Act XXI of 1879 is not restricted to offences as defined in this Code).]

S. 4 (1) (o), Note 3.

For similar instances, see the undermentioned cases.[2-a]

In proceedings under Chapter VIII[3] or Chapter XII[4] or under S. 133[5] of this Code, the charge may be regarded as information to set the Magistrate in motion rather than to punish the person proceeded against and the proceedings thereunder are therefore not proceedings relating to any 'offence'.

Again where the law provides for certain orders to be passed by the Magistrate and attaches penalties for the disobedience of such orders, the orders themselves are not "offences" though the breach or disobedience thereof will be.

Illustrations.

1. An order to pay maintenance under Section 488 of this Code is not a conviction for an offence.[6] But a breach of such an order or disobedience thereof being punishable with imprisonment is an offence.[7]

S. 4 (1) (o), Notes 3—4.

2. A mere breach of a contract under the Workmen's Breach of Contract Act and the Magistrate's order under sub-S. (1), S. 2 and S. 3 thereof are not 'offences'.[8] But the omission to comply with an order made by the Magistrate is an offence.[9]

3. An order of the Magistrate directing the demolition or alteration of work which has been unlawfully erected, under the Municipal Acts is not a punishment, for an "offence" under the Acts, though a disobedience of such an order is an 'offence'.[10]

4. The mere use of a house as a brothel, or a disorderly house is not an offence but when a Magistrate passes an order prohibiting the use of the house as brothel, the disobedience of such an order is an offence.[11]

4. By any law for the time being in force.—An ordinance is a 'law for the time being in force' and an infringement of its provisions, is an offence within the meaning of this definition.[1] The words 'any law' would include not only the Penal Code but also all Local or Special laws which create offences. The following are some instances of such laws:—

(1) Opium Act.—S. 9. Selling of opium in contravention of the conditions of licenses[2] or importing of opium in contravention of the Act.[3]

1. Officer in charge of Police station.—The object of the definition is to permit of the discharge of the duties of an officer in charge of a police station by some other person when such officer is absent from the station house or is unable from illness or other cause to attend to his duties.[1] The definition comes into play only when the officer in charge of the Police station is absent from the station house or is unable to perform his duties. When he is present in the station house and able to attend to his duties, the other persons mentioned in the definition cannot wield the powers of an officer in charge of a Police station.[2]

The power to act for the officer in charge of a police station is conferred on the next senior police officer who is "present at the station house". This does not mean that the moment such officer leaves the station house he loses his

1. "Pleader".—The effect of this clause is to extend the meaning of the term "pleader" so as to include persons who may not otherwise come within the expression. The words "any other person.....and such proceeding" are not to be read ejusdem generis with the previous words and do not refer to advocates, pleaders, or mukhtars authorised under any law to practice.[1-a] Thus, even a person who has not been enrolled as a legal practitioner but who has been appointed by a party with the permission of the Court to represent him in any proceeding under the Code would be a "pleader" for the purpose of that proceeding.[1] Thus "Private vakils" can be allowed to appear as pleaders in criminal cases.[2]

The discretion of the Court in permitting persons to appear as "pleaders" must be exercised judicially with due regard to the interests of the party engaging him.[3] The character of the person appointed is one of the factors to be considered in granting permission.[4] The discretion, again, must be exercised in each case. A general order prohibiting a particular class of persons from appearing is not legal.[5] Similarly, a Court cannot pass an order prohibiting a certain person from appearing in any case in that Court.[6] Moreover, unless a person has been appointed by a party the Court cannot sanction his appearance as a pleader in a case.[7]

Mukhtars.—Before the amendments of 1923 even a mukhtar authorised to practise in a Court had to obtain the permission of the Court in each case before he could appear as a pleader in criminal proceedings.[8] Now as a result of the amendments, a mukhtar who is authorised to practise in the Court in question is not required to take the permission of the Court in each case before appearing in it as a pleader. So long as he is entitled to practise in a Court as a mukhtar, he is also entitled to appear in that Court as a pleader in criminal cases.[9] In provinces in which Mukhtars are not recognised they can appear by getting the permission of the Court in each case.[10]

Persons who have been enrolled as pleaders, advocates, vakils or attorneys but who are not entitled to practise in the particular Court in question cannot appear as "Pleaders" in criminal cases as a matter of right but can do so only with the permission of the Court.[11]

SUMMONS AND WARRANT CASES .. .. .. Note No. 1

Sessions Case, What is. See S. 206.

1. Summons and warrant cases.—The distinction between a summons case and a warrant case, is to be noted chiefly because the procedure prescribed for each is different. They are prescribed under Chapters XX and XXI respectively. The distinction is quite apart from the question whether a summons or warrant shall issue in the first instance and whether an offence is cognizable and non-cognizable. Thus where the Code deals with offences only, it divides them into cognizable and non-cognizable but when it deals with procedure it speaks of cases, as a summons case or as a warrant case.[1] In such a case the nature of the 'offence' need not be considered and a case becomes a 'summons case' or 'warrant case' according to the nature and the measure of punishment which the law attaches to the offence.[2] Where there is a charge of abetment of a specific offence, the abetment is a summons case or a warrant case according as the specific offence is a summons or a warrant case.[3]

1. Acts extend to illegal omissions.—For analogous provisions, see S. 3 (2) of the General Clauses Act X of 1897 and S. 32 of the Penal Code. See also the following cases.[1]

2. Words to have the same meaning as in the Penal Code.—This section adopts the definitions of words given in the Penal Code when they are not expressly defined in this Code. Thus the words "Force" and "Criminal force" used in S. 522 must be interpreted according to the definitions of those words in Ss. 349 and 350 of the Penal Code.[1] Similarly the words "Special Law" in S. 1, sub-S. (2)[2] "in jury" in S. 545[3] "punishable"[4] and "Judge" in S. 539[5] in this Code must have the meaning given them in Ss. 41, 44, 53 and 19 of the Penal Code, respectively.

The second paragraph of this sub-section, however, must be read as qualified by the words "unless a different intention appears from the subject or context" occurring in the beginning of sub-S. (1). Thus "adultery" in S. 488 means intercourse by a husband or wife with another, and is not limited to the meaning of the word in S. 497 of the Penal Code.[6] all words and expressions used herein and defined in the Indian Penal Code, and not hereinbefore defined, shall be deemed to have the meanings respectively attributed to them by that Code.

S. 4 (2), Note 2. Again the word "moveable property" as defined in S. 22 of the Penal Code is limited to corporeal property while the definition of the same word in the General Clauses Act includes debts also. The word as used in this Code does not always either convey the restricted sense of the Penal Code or the extended sense of the General Clauses Act but should be construed with reference to the context. Thus where the word 'attached' is used with reference to "moveable property", the latter includes debts and choses in action but where the words "distress and sale" are used then moveable property means only tangible or corporeal property and does not include debts or choses in action.[7]

All offences under the Code. 5. All offences under the Indian Penal Code shall be inquired into and tried according to the provisions hereinafter contained; and all offences under any other law shall be inquired into and tried according to the same provisions, but subject to any enactment for the time being in force regulating the manner or place of inquiring into or trying such offences.

(7) (1917) 1917 Mad. 748, Secretary of State v. Sengammal.

1. Legislative changes—

Change made in the Code of 1898:—

The words "investigated" and "otherwise dealt with" were added in both the Sub-Ss. 1 and 2.

The above amendment makes the section applicable to proceedings before the Police also.

2. Scope and applicability of the section.—This section states the procedure to be followed in the investigation, inquiry or trial of offences under the Penal Code as well as offences under other laws. In the former class of offences, the procedure to be followed is that provided by this Code. In the latter class of offences also the same procedure is to be followed, but subject to any enactment in force regulating the procedure in such cases.

In criminal proceedings the question is not alone whether substantial justice has been done according to law. All proceedings in poenam are strictissimmi juris.[1] It is therefore the duty of the presiding officer in criminal trials to see that the procedure as laid down in the Code is strictly and fully complied with.[2]

What officers to hold inquiries.

6. All inquiries by Magistrates shall be held according to the provisions hereinafter contained.

What Courts to try offences.

7. All criminal trials in British India shall be held before the Courts specified in the fourth schedule to this Act, or before the Courts specified in any law by which the offence is created, according to the provisions hereinafter contained.

Offences under local and special laws.

8. Offences punishable under any law, other than the Indian Penal Code, containing no distinct provision as to the Court or officer before which or before whom they are tried, may be inquired into and tried according to the provisions hereinafter contained, by the Criminal Courts appointed under this Act. But no such Court shall award any sentence in excess of its powers.

63.—Explanation:—Offences created by local and special laws may be inquired into and tried in any place where the inquiry or trial might be held under the provisions of those laws or of this Code.

Offences cognizable by Criminal Courts.

21. The Criminal Courts of the several grades, according to the powers vested in them respectively by this Act, shall have jurisdiction in respect of offences punishable under the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) or under any special or local law (except offences which are by any such law made punishable by some other authority therein specially mentioned), and in the investigation and trial of the offences hereby declared to be within their jurisdiction, shall be guided by the provisions of this Act.

3. "Otherwise dealt with."—An offence may be said to be "otherwise dealt with" in the following cases:—

(1) Where offenders liable to be tried by a Court Martial are delivered over to Military authorities under S. 549, infra.

(2) Where a case is transferred from one Panchayat Court to another under S. 526.[1]

4. "Enactment"—The word "Enactment" applies only to provisions directly enacted by the Legislature. It does not include a Rule framed under the provisions of an Act[1] though such Rule may be a "Law."

5. "Any other Law."—A notification issued under an Act is a law within the meaning of this section: as for example one made under S. 30 of the Police Act (1861).[1] Similarly an "Ordinance" is a "law" within the meaning of this section.[2]

6. "Offences against other laws"—Sub-S. (2).—Where an offence is one under a special or local law but there is no enactment prescribing any procedure for the investigation of the offence, the procedure laid down in this Code must be followed.[1] Where, on the other hand a complete procedure is provided in any enactment for the trial, etc., of such offences, it is that procedure that must

1. Criminal Court.—Under the Code of 1861 the words "Criminal Court" and "Court of Justice" were defined as follows:—

"S. 11.—The words "Criminal Court" shall denote every Judge or Magistrate lawfully exercising jurisdiction in criminal cases, whether for the decision of such cases in the first instance or an appeal, or for commitment to any other Court or officer."

"S. 12—The words "Court of Justice" shall denote a judge who is empowered by law to act judicially alone, or a body of judges empowered by law to act judicially as a body when such judge, or body of judges is acting judicially."

In the undermentioned case[1] arising under that Code it was held that the definition of the words "Criminal Court" as given above was not an exhaustive

CONSTITUTION AND POWERS OF THE CRIMINAL COURTS.

Of Criminal Courts.

5. Besides the High Courts, there shall be four Grades of Criminal Courts in British India:—

I.—The Court of the Magistrate of the Third Class.
II.—The Court of the Magistrate of the Second Class.
III.—The Court of the Magistrate of the First Class.
IV.—The Court of Session.

Of Magistrates and their Powers.

Magistrates to be of three classes.

19. Magistrates shall be either-Magistrates of the First Class, Magistrates of the Second Class, or Magistrates of the Third Class.

enumeration of the functions of Criminal Courts and that a Magistrate who is directed by the appellate Court to take further evidence is also a "Criminal Court." In view of this decision the Code of 1872, after adding a definition of the words "Judicial proceeding", defined a "Criminal Court" as meaning and including "every Judge or Magistrate, or body of judges or Magistrates inquiring into, or trying any criminal case or engaged in any judicial proceeding."[1-a] The definition of the words "Court of justice" was omitted apparently on the ground that it was unnecessary, inasmuch as the expression was actually never used anywhere in the Code.

The Code of 1882, omitted the definition of the words "Criminal Court," but by S. 4 thereof imported therein the definition of all words given in the Penal Code which were not defined by it. The definition of "Criminal Court" was really not necessary, as, according to well known principles, a Judge or Magistrate acting judicially in criminal matters is obviously a criminal Court. The omission might have been due also to the fact that the definition as given was not a correct one in that it could be construed to include all Courts whatever be the nature of the proceeding, whether criminal or otherwise, provided it was a judicial proceeding.

This section divides the Criminal Courts in British India into several groups, and the second, third, fourth and fifth groups are "Magistrates." This however, does not mean that a Magistrate is always a Court whatever he is doing. He has executive as well as judicial duties to perform[2] and it is in the performance of the latter duties that he is acting as a Court. The section can therefore, only mean that among the Criminal Courts in British India are Magistrates, and that when the latter act judicially they are criminal Courts.[3] In Clarke v. Brojendra Kishore Roy,[4] their Lordships of the Privy Council observed that "for the sake of brevity the Code uses the terms "Court" and "Magistrates", generally if not always, as convertible terms." An examination of the various sections of the Code would seem to show that the word "Court" is used wherever it is intended to include all classes of Criminal Courts (including the Court of Session and the High Court), and the word "Magistrate", wherever it is intended to exclude certain Courts or classes of Courts.

But though a Magistrate acting judicially is a Criminal Court, he is not always a "Judge" or his Court a "Court of Justice." The reason is this: S. 19 of the Penal Code excludes committing Magistrates from the definition of "Judge" and S. 20 defines a "Court of Justice" as denoting a judge. These definitions, apply, as has already been seen, to this Code also by virtue of S. 4, sub-S. 2, and consequently, even under this Code a committing Magistrate is not a judge, and his Court not a "Court of Justice".[5] It is, however, clear that he is engaged in a judicial proceeding and is therefore a Criminal Court.[6]

2. Magistrate acting in executive or administrative capacity.—As has been seen in Note 1 above a Magistrate under the Code has executive as well as judicial powers. Thus an order under S. 144 of the Code is an executive act.[1] Similarly the making of a departmental inquiry under the orders of the Government is an executive act.[2] An order under S. 96 of the Code[3] or under S. 145 of the Code[4] is, on the other hand a Judicial Order.

See also Notes to S. 435, infra.

3. Courts enumerated in the section are different from each other.—

The Courts enumerated in the section are as follows:—

1. High Courts (for definition See S. 4 (j).)
2. Courts constituted under any law other than this Code.
3. Courts of Session.
4. Presidency Magistrates.
5. Magistrate of the First Class.
6. Magistrates of the Second Class.
7. Magistrates of the Third Class.

Each class of Court is distinct and different from the others. Thus a High Court is not a Court of Session—even when exercising original criminal jurisdiction.[1] Nor is a Court of Session, a Magistrate under any circumstances.[2] Nor is a Presidency Magistrate, a Magistrate of the First Class,[3] or any other class of Magistrate referred to in the section.[4]

Where a First Class Magistrate is appointed under S. 10, infra for a District he is called a "District Magistrate." A Magistrate of the first or second class placed in charge of a sub-division under S. 13, infra is called a Sub-Divisional Magistrate." A person on whom any or all the powers of a Magistrate of the first, second or third class under S. 14, infra is called a "Special Magistrate." But all these fall only under one or other of the third, fourth and fifth classes of Courts mentioned in the section. The Code does not recognise any such Court as the "Court of a District Magistrate" or the "Court of a Sub-Divisional Magistrate" or the Court of a Deputy Magistrate" or "the Court of a Special Magistrate.[5]

4. Criminal Courts constituted under other laws.—A Court constituted under any other law for the time being in force to try criminal cases is a Criminal Court.[1-a] Thus the Court of a Municipal Magistrate of Calcutta[1] or of the village headman under the Burmah Village Act (III of 1889)[2] or of a village Panchayat constituted under U. P. Act VI of 1920[3] is a Criminal Court. But a Police Patel under the Village Police Act (VIII of 1867)[4] or the President of the Tribunal under the Calcutta Rent Act, 1920[5] is not a Criminal Court.

3. "Province."—The word "province" has not been defined in this Code and consequently the definition thereof in the General Clauses Act, 1897 will apply. A "province" under S. 3, Sub-S. 43 means the "territories for the time being administered by any Local Government". S. 60 of the Government of India Act, 1915 provides that the Governor-General in Council, may, by notification, declare, appoint or alter the boundaries of any of the province into which British India is divided, and distribute the territories among the several provinces thereof in such manner as may seem expedient subject to certain qualications.

4. "Presidency Town".—The expression "Presidency Town" means the local limits for the time being of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William, Madras and Bombay.[1]

5. "Local Government".—As defined by S. 3, Cl. 29 of the General Clauses Act, 1897 "Local Government" means the person authorised by law to administer executive Government in that part of British India in which the Act or regulation containing the expression operates and includes a Chief Commissioner.

6. "District."—The word "District" has not been defined in this Code or in the General Clauses Act, 1897. It has been held by a Full Bench of the High Court of Madras that it is not the same thing as a revenue district, though very often they are co-extensive and conterminous, but means a district for the purposes of criminal administration.[1] Where, under Sub-S. 2 of the section the Government notified that the "deep stream" of the river Gogra was to be the boundary between two districts X and Y but after the date of the notification the river divided into two branches and the question arose as to whether the land between the two branches formed part of the district X or district Y it was held by the High Court of Calcutta that the "deep stream" spoken of in the notification must be the deep stream as it existed at the time of the notification.[2] The Oudh Judicial Commissioner's Court has dissented from this view and has held that the boundary must be the "deep stream" as found at the particular time in question and not at the date of the notification.[3] S. 7, Notes 6—8.

7. Sessions Division.—The formation of two Sessions Divisions in the same Revenue District, i.e., in the same Collectorate is not unwarranted by law.[1] It has been held by a Full Bench of the High Court of Madras that, by virtue of the words "every Sessions Division shall for the purposes of this Code, be a district, each of the Sessions Divisions so formed will become a "District" for the purposes of criminal administration.[2] In that case two Sessions Divisions. East Tanjore and West Tanjore were formed by the Local Government by notification, in the same revenue district of Tanjore and the question arose whether the notification was ultra vires or intra vires. The majority of the judges held that each of the Sessions Divisions so formed would become a separate district for the purposes of criminal administration and that the notification was not ultra vires. Jackson J., however differed from this view and held that the word "District" must be given its ordinary sense of revenue district, that if the Government had made two districts, East and West Tanjore, it would have appointed a District Magistrate in each district as, under S. 10 of the Code, it was bound to do, and that the formation of two Sessions Divisions in the same district was therefore ultra vires. The doubt as regards the particular notification has, however, now been set at rest by the East and West Tanjore Sessions Divisions Validation Act VI of 1931 (Madras).

Difference between the Code of 1872 and the Code of 1882—

Section 17 of the Code of 1872 provided that the Additional Sessions Judges, etc., appointed by the Local Governments "shall try such cases only as the local Government directs them to try, or as the Sessions Judge of the Division makes over to them for trial". The Code of 1882 transferred the matter in quotation to a separate section namely S. 193. The distribution however, did not make any difference in the law.[1]

Difference between the Code of 1882 and the present Code.—

(1) Sub-Ss. 2 and 4 of this Section are new.

(2) The words "Joint Sessions Judges" which occurred in the portion corresponding to the present sub-S. 3 have been omitted. See also S. 3, Sub-S. 2 ante under which the expression "joint Sessions Judge" in previous enactments shall mean "Additional Sessions Judge."[2]

2. Scope of the Section.—Under the Scheme of the Code the general frame work of the administration of justice, such as the division of the province into sessions division and their boundaries and places of sitting, the appointment of Sessions Judges and the classification of offences into those triable by jury and those triable with the assessors is left by Ss. 7 to 9 and S. 269 of the Code to the Local Government.[1] This Section deals with the power of the Local Government to establish Court of Sessions to appoint Judges thereto and to direct at what place or places such Court shall hold its sitting.[2] The conditions necessary for exercise of jurisdiction by such Judges is set forth in Ss. 193 and 409 infra.

3. Court of Session.—The Local Government is bound under this Section to establish the Court of Session for every Sessions division in the province.[1] The words "Court of Session", wherever it is used in the Code, means a Court established under this Section[2]. A High Court exercising original criminal jurisdiction[3] or a Court established under a special or local law with powers similar to a Court of Sessions under the Code,[4] is not a Court of Sessions within the meaning of the Code.

There can be one Court of Session for every sessions division though it may be manned by several Judges; it would be inaccurate to use the expression "Court of the Sessions Judge" or "Court of the Additional or Assistant Sessions Judge".[5] The High Court of Bombay has however held that the Sessions Judge and the additional and the Assistant Sessions Judges, though exercising jurisdiction as a Sessions Court are, while exercising such jurisdiction, different Courts for the purpose of Ss. 473,[6] 487[7] and 526[8] of the Code.

4. Jurisdiction of Judges appointed under this Section.—A person not appointed under this Section as a Sessions Judge or as an additional or assistant Sessions Judge, has no jurisdiction to act as such, under the Code and if he does so act, the acts would be void.[1] The Local Government is bound to appoint a Judge for every Court of Sessions. It may also appoint additional or assistant Sessions Judges to exercise jurisdiction in such a Court. But, as has been seen before, there is only one Court of Sessions manned by several Judges. A Sessions Judge is therefore competent to make a complaint in respect of an offence committed before the Additional Sessions Judge,[2] or withdraw to his file an appeal made over by him to the Additional Sessions Judge.[3]

The exercise of jurisdiction by the additional and assistant Sessions Judges is however limited by several sections of the Code, e.g., Ss. 193 and 409, infra.[4] Thus under S. 193 of the Code they can try only such "cases" as the Local Government may, by special or general order, direct, or as the Sessions Judge of the Division may, by such order, make over to them for trial.[5] Under S. 409 of the Code appeals can be tried only by Sessions Judges and additional Sessions Judges and even the latter can hear only such appeals as the Local Government may, by general or special order, direct, or as the sessions may make over to them for trial. An assistant Sessions Judge has no power to hear any appeals and the Sessions Judge has therefore no power to transfer an appeal filed in his Court to an assistant Sessions Judge for hearing.[6]

S. 9, Notes 4—6.

A Sessions Judge can exercise jurisdiction only in his division and therefore cannot direct a stay of proceedings in a case pending before a Magistrate outside his Sessions division, although the case has arisen out of a sanction granted by a Magistrate within such division.[7] He can however, under S. 438 infra, refer the proceedings of the latter to the High Court.[8]

5. Power to direct place or places of sitting.—The power to direct at what place or places the Court of Sessions shall hold its sitting does not affect the powers of the High Court to transfer cases from one Court to another under S. 526 infra. Thus where the Local Government of Bombay directed by notification that the Additional Judge at Thana shall hold his sitting at Alibag and try a particular case there, it was held by the Court of Bombay that, under S. 526 of the Code it can transfer the case from the Court of Session sitting at Alibag to the Court of Session at Thana.[1] In the absence of any such order by the Local Government the hearing or trial of a case should be held within the area of the Sessions Division and not outside it.[2] The reason is that "all judicial acts exercised by persons whose judicial authority is limited as to locality should be done within the locality to which such authority is limited. See also notes to S. 531, infra.

6. Courts constituted under other laws.—The provisions of the Code do not affect any special or local law in force, or any special jurisdiction or power conferred, or any special form of procedure prescribed by any other law for the time being in force.[1] It follows that where a Court has been established under a special law and a Judge appointed for such Court, the Local Government cannot establish a Court under this Section and appoint a Judge therefor so as to affect the jurisdiction of the Court established under the special law.[2] The powers exercisable by the Judge of the latter Court will be such as are conferred upon him by the Act under which he is appointed.[3]

(1) Sub-S. 2 was newly added in 1898.

Amendment of 1923—

(1) The words "for a period not exceeding six months" which occurred in sub-S. 2 after words "an Additional District Magistrate" were omitted.

(2) The words "or under any other Law for the time being in force" after the words "under this Code" were added.

(3) Sub-S. 3 was newly added.

The Magistrate of the District.

Magistrate of the District.

In every District there shall be a Magistrate of the First Class appointed by the Local Government, who shall be called the Magistrate of the District and shall exercise throughout his district all the powers of a Magistrate.

(CODE OF 1861—Nil.)

S. 10, Notes 2—5.

2. "In every District".—The words "shall appoint a Magistrate in every District" does not necessarily imply that the Magistrate so appointed shall be situate in the distinct and that he may not be one with headquarters elsewhere.[1] As to the meaning of the word "District" see S. 7 ante.

3. District Magistrate.—Under the Code of 1861 the words "Magistrate of the District" were defined as meaning the Chief Officer charged with the executive administration of a District in criminal matters by whatever designation such officer was called.[1] Under the present Code, the Local Government should appoint in a district outside the Presidency Towns a Magistrate of the first class who shall be called the District Magistrate. A Presidency Magistrate is not a 'District Magistrate' within the meaning of the Code. The reason is that he is not appointed as a Magistrate in a district outside the Presidency Town.[2]

4. "Shall appoint a Magistrate of the first class".—It has been held by a Full Bench of the High Court of Madras that one officer can be appointed separately as District Magistrate for two or more Districts.[1] But no Magistrate can be appointed as District Magistrate to a non-existent district. Thus where the Criminal District of Tanjore became, by virtue of a Government Notification of the year 1921, split up into the two Criminal districts of East and West Tanjore, but the Government continued to appoint a District Magistrate for "Tanjore", it was held that since the notification of 1921, the Criminal district of "Tanjore" had ceased to exist and the Magistrate appointed thereto could have no jurisdiction.[2]

5. Additional District Magistrate.—The object of the appointment of an Additional District Magistrate is to relieve the District Magistrate of some of his duties and not to place the former on the footing of the latter.[1] The fact, therefore, that the Additional District Magistrate may have all or any of the powers of a District Magistrate does not make him a "District Magistrate" himself. There can be only one person in the District who can be the District Magistrate.[2]

The scope of the powers conferred under Sub-S. 2 is not limited to the ordinary powers of a District Magistrate set out in Schedule III (v) but extends to all powers which the District Magistrate is empowered to exercise at the date of a particular notification appointing an Additional District Magistrate and conferring on him all the powers of a District Magistrate, e.g., power to grant sanction under S. 197 of the Code.[3]

6. Subordination of Additional District Magistrate to District Magistrate.—Before the amendment of 1923 there was a difference of opinion as to whether an Additional District Magistrate is subordinate to the District Magistrate.[1] Sub-S. 3 now makes it clear that he is subordinate to the District Magistrate to the extent specified therein.

7. Powers and duties of the District Magistrate.—The District Magistrate is primarily liable for the peace of the district.[1] He exercises general control over the police force[2] and is the Court of appeal from the orders of first class Magistrates in proceedings under Chapter VIII.[3] He is the principal representative of the law, for most purposes, in the eyes of the people and occupies a position of great power and responsibility.[4] It is also the duty of a District Magistrate to see that all the Magistrates in the district exercise the powers conferred on them not only in accordance with law but also in an equitable and rational manner.[5]

SYNOPSIS.

SCOPE OF THE SECTION .. .. Note No. 1
POWERS AND DUTIES OF OFFICER SUCCEEDING TO A VACANCY 2

Reversion whether affects jurisdiction. See Note 2, Pt. 2.

1. Scope of the section.—This section applies only:
   1. Where the office of the District Magistrate becomes vacant and
   2. Where any officer succeeds temporarily to the chief executive administration of the District.

An office cannot be said to be "vacant" where the officer is temporarily disabled from attending to his work and is absent on casual leave.[1] Nor can an Officer be said to "succeed temporarily" to the chief executive administration of the district unless he has, by order, been appointed to officiate as the District Magistrate.[2] Consequently an officer who assumes charge of the current duties of the office during the absence on casual leave of the District Magistrate, cannot exercise all the powers or perform all the duties of a District Magistrate. Thus he cannot transfer a case from one Magistrate to another[3] or act under section 437.[4]

2. Powers and duties of officer succeeding to a vacancy.—The officer succeeding temporarily to the chief executive administration of the District has all the powers and should perform all the duties of a District Magistrate.[1]

Where a Magistrate of the first class while officiating for the District Magistrate commences a trial and during its pendency reverts as Magistrate of the first class he has jurisdiction to continue the trial provided that he, as a Magistrate of the first class, could have held the trial.[2]

Powers of officers temporarily succeeding to vacancies in office of Magistrate of District.

55. When, in consequence of the office of a Magistrate of the District becoming vacant, any officer succeeds temporarily to the chief executive administration of the district in criminal matters, such officer shall, pending the orders of the Local Government, exercise all the ordinary powers, and perform all the duties, of the Magistrate of the District.

1. Legislative changes.—S. 23 of the Code of 1861 empowered the Local Government to appoint Magistrates of the first and second class only.

Para 1 of S. 37 of the Code of 1872 corresponding to the first half of sub-S. 1 of this section provided for the appointment of third class Magistrates also.

The second clause of Sub-S. 1 and Sub-S. 2 of this section were newly introduced into S. 12 of the Code of 1882.

*(CODE OF 1882—S. 12.)

12. The Local Government may appoint as many persons as it thinks fit, besides the District Magistrate, to be Magistrates of the first, second, or third class in any District outside the Presidency-towns; and the Local Government, or the District Magistrate subject to the control of the Local Government, may, from time to time, define local areas within which such persons may exercise all or any of the powers with which they may respectively be invested under this Code.

Subordinate Magistrates.

Local limits of their jurisdiction.

S. 12, Notes 1—4.

There has been no change in the section since the enactment of the Code of 1882.

2. Duration of appointment of Magistrates.—It has been held by the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur that the practice of appointing Magistrates for a term of years is wrong and that where a Magistrate is appointed for a particular period, the term imposed is ultra vires the powers of the Government and that his jurisdiction to try cases extends even after the expiry of the period in the absence of an order cancelling his appointment.[1] Compare with Sub-S. 2 of S. 14.

See also the undermentioned cases.[2]

3. Cantonment Magistrates.—S. 7 of the Cantonments Act (XIII of 1889) provides that the Cantonment Magistrate shall be a Magistrate appointed by the Local Government under this section. Therefore convictions by Cantonment Magistrates of offences punishable under Cantonment rules are appealable in the same manner as convictions by other Magistrates of the same Class.[1]

4. Local Area.—The words "Local Area" in this section appear to contemplate some area within a district.[1] See also Note 3 to S. 14, infra.

Local Government may authorize Magistrate of District to distribute business by localities.

49. The Magistrate of the District, under the general or special orders of the Local Government, may authorize any Magistrate subordinate to him to entertain complaints arising within certain local limits, and may from time to time vary such orders; Provided that no such Magistrate shall be authorized to entertain any complaint of any offence which he is not competent to try or to commit for trial.

Local Government may invest any person with powers of Magistrate or Subordinate Magistrate.

23. The Local Government may invest any person with the powers of a Magistrate or of a Subordinate Magistrate of the first or second class, as described in the last preceding Section, with a view to the exercise, by such person, of such powers under this Act or under any special or local law.

5. Extent of jurisdiction of Magistrates.—A Magistrate who has been appointed, under this section, to a district has jurisdiction throughout the district unless the area of his jurisdiction has been defined or curtailed under the latter part of Sub-S. 1 of this section.[1] If the jurisdiction of a Magistrate is so defined to a local area or a sub-Division, he cannot take cognisance of a case outside such local area or sub-division.[2]

6. Jurisdiction of a Magistrate outside the District.—The Legislature does not contemplate the exercise of jurisdiction by any Magistrate outside the limits of an area called a district in which he might be appointed by the Local Government.[1]

7. Transfer of Magistrates—Effect of.—It has been already seen in Note 5, ante, that the jurisdiction of a Magistrate extends to the whole of a district. Therefore, where a Magistrate is transferred from one local area to another within the same district he does not thereby cease to have jurisdiction in the former area.[1] The Magistrate has the same Magisterial powers, though his judicial designation and his local jurisdiction may be changed. But when a Magistrate is transferred from one district to another and he hands over charge to his successor, he has no jurisdiction thereafter in the former area and a judgment pronounced by him after handing over charge is bad in law.[2]

POWERS OF SUB-DIVISIONAL MAGISTRATES	2

Difference between the Codes of 1861 and 1872:—

1. Under S. 23-D of the Code of 1872 corresponding to this section the Local Government alone had the power to appoint any Magistrate to the charge of a division of a district.[1] But under S. 40 of the Code of 1872 the Local Government could delegate its powers to the Magistrate of a District.

II. Under the Code of 1861, any Magistrate could be appointed to the charge of a sub-division; while under S. 40 of the Code of 1872 only, a Magistrate of the first or second class could be so appointed.

Difference between the Codes of 1872 and 1882.

The words "and shall exercise the powers conferred on him under this Act or under any law for the time being in force subject to the control of the Magistrate of the district" occurring at the end of Sub-S. 2 of S. 40 of the Code of 1872 were omitted in S. 13 of the Code of 1872.

There has been no alteration since 1882.

Delegation of powers to District Magistrate.

Local Government may put Magistrate in charge of division.

40. The Local Government may place any Magistrate of the first or second class in charge of a division of a district.

Such Magistrate shall be called a Magistrate of a Division of a District, and shall exercise the powers conferred on him under this Act, or under any law for the time being in force, subject to the control of the Magistrate of the District.

Delegation of power to Magistrate of District.

The Local Government may, if it thinks fit, delegate its powers under this section to the Magistrate of the District.

2. Powers of Sub-Divisional Magistrates.—It has been already mentioned in Note 5 to S. 12, ante that the jurisdiction and powers of a Magistrate extend throughout the district unless it has been defined. Therefore, where a Magistrate of the first or second class is placed in charge of a sub-division, he acquires certain additional powers in the area of the sub-division, but the appointment does not deprive him of his powers as a Magistrate in the area outside the sub-division.[1] Thus, where a Magistrate of the first class having jurisdiction throughout a district is placed in charge of a sub-division, he is competent to issue a warrant under S. 5 of the Gambling Act (1867) to search a house situate in the same district, but outside the area of his sub-division.[2]

Special Magistrates.

(2) Such Magistrates shall be called Special Magistrates, and shall be appointed for such term as the Local Government may by general or special order direct.

(3) The Local Government may delegate, with such limitations as it thinks fit, to any officer under its control the powers conferred by sub-section (1).

(4) No powers shall be conferred under this section on any police officer below the grade of Assistant District Superintendent, and no powers shall be conferred on a police officer except so far as may be necessary for preserving the peace, preventing crime, and detecting, apprehending, and detaining offenders in order to their being brought before a Magistrate, and for the performance by the officer of any other duties imposed upon him by any law for the time being in force.

1. Legislative Changes.—

There was no section in the Code of 1861 corresponding to this.

Difference between Codes of 1872 and 1882—

The words "in any local area outside the presidency towns" occurring at the end of sub-S. 1 of S. 14 of the Code of 1882 were substituted for the words "in any part of a district, or in any one or more districts, subject to such Local Government" occurring in S. 42 of the Code of 1872.

Difference between the Codes of 1882 and 1898—

The words "and shall be appointed for such term as the Local Government may by general or special order direct" at the end of sub-S. 2 of this section were newly added in the Code of 1898.

Amendment after 1898—

The words "with the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council" occurring at the beginning of sub-S. 3 were omitted by the Devolution Act XXXVIII of 1920.

With the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council, the Local Government may delegate, with such limitations as it thinks fit, to any officer under its control the power conferred by the first paragraph of this section.

No powers shall be conferred under this section on any Police-officer below the grade of Assistant District Superintendent, and no powers shall be so conferred except so far as may be necessary for preserving the peace, preventing crime, and detecting, apprehending and detaining offenders in order to their being brought before a Magistrate, and for the performance by the officer of any other duties imposed upon him by any law for the time being in force.

42. The Local Government may confer upon any person all or any of the powers of a Magistrate of the first, second or third class, in respect to particular offences, or to a particular class or particular classes of offences, or in regard to offences generally, in any part of a district, or in any one or more districts, subject to such Local Government.

S. 14, Notes 2—6.

2. Scope of the section.—The connotation of a special Magistrate appointed under this section is that he should have (a) specified powers conferrable by the Local Government on a Magistrate, (b) a local area within which to exercise those powers, and (c) jurisdiction to try particular cases or a particular class of cases generally.[1]

3. "Local Area".—The term 'local area' in S. 12 ante appears to contemplate some area within a district. See also Ss. 40, 182 and 531 where the same words are used. But in this section the term is wide enough to permit the inclusion of a whole province (except the presidency towns) within the jurisdiction of a special Magistrate.[1] Thus, where the Government of the Punjab appointed a special Magistrate under this section with all the powers of a Magistrate of the first class in regard to cases generally throughout the Punjab, it was held that the appointment was not ultra vires, inasmuch as the words 'local area' could be extended to cover the whole province.[2] They cannot be interpreted as including areas outside the province. The reason is that the Local Government cannot give powers beyond its own local limits and that the necessary limitation, though unexpressed must be read into the section.[3]

It is incumbent upon a Local Government conferring powers under this section to define the local area within which the special Magistrate is to exercise the powers.[4] As to the legality of a trial by a special Magistrate where the order of appointment does not mention the local area, see the cases cited in foot note 4 below.

4. 'Case'—Meaning of.—The word 'case' in this section does not necessarily mean a single charge; it comprises all charges or classes of charges.[1] Thus, where the Government appointed a special Magistrate under this section "to try the case relating to the prosecution of Mr.C." it was held that the Magistrate was empowered to try all the charges that may be laid against that person in that prosecution.[2]

5. Appointment to try—Power to commit.—The power to 'try a case' would necessarily include the power to take cognisance. Therefore, where a Magistrate is appointed under this section to try a case, he can commit the accused for trial before a Court of Session.[1]

6. Trial by Police Officer.—Sub-S. 4 expressly prohibits a Police Officer from being invested with powers to try cases. Where a District Superin-

1. Legislative changes.—

There was no section in the Code of 1861 corresponding to this section and sub-Ss. 1 and 2 correspond respectively to Ss. 50 and 51 of the Code of 1872.

Difference between the Codes of 1872 and 1882—

(1) The words "direct it to try such cases or such classes of cases" in S. 50 of the Code of 1872 have been substituted by the words "direct it to exercise such powers in such cases or classes of cases, "in sub-S. (1) of S. 15 of the Code of 1882. Under the Code of 1872 it was held that the word 'try' showed that it referred only to trials for offences and not to miscellaneous matters such as those coming within S. 530 (Corresponding to S. 145 of this Code).[1] In view of the change in the word of the section the above mentioned ruling is no longer law.

(2) The words "and as far as possible shall for the purposes of this Code be deemed to be a Magistrate of such Class" were added at the end of sub-S. (2) in the Code of 1882.

Powers exercisable by such Bench in absence of special directions.

51. In the absence of any special direction as to the powers of any such Bench, it shall have the powers of a Magistrate of the highest class to which any one of its members belongs, and who is present taking part in the proceedings.

(1) (1878) 3 Cal. 754 (755), Suferuddin v. Ibrahim.

S. 15, Notes 2—3.

2. Scope and object of the Section.—This section empowers the Local Government to direct that two or more Magistrates should "sit together" as a Bench and to confer on such Bench the powers to be exercised by it. The next section provides inter alia for the making of rules for the guidance of Magistrates' Benches in regard to the constitution of Benches for conducting trials. Reading the two sections together, it is clear that under this section the power of the Government is to create a panel of Magistrates in each place out of whom the Benches under the next section are to be constituted. When a number of Magistrates in a place are directed under this section to "sit together" as a Bench it does not mean that all of them should sit together in Session and that only when they do so they can exercise the powers conferred on the Bench under this section. The powers can be exercised by any Bench that is constituted under the next section out of the Magistrates directed to "sit together" as a Bench under this section.[1] The object of constituting a Bench of Magistrates is that the Magistrates composing the Bench should individually and collectively give their attention and apply their minds to the hearing of the evidence and the determination of the points at issue and arrive at an independent judgment in regard to the merits of the case.[2] Where in a trial before a Bench of two Magistrates, one of them recorded the evidence, while the other was attending to some other case and a joint judgment was delivered with the signatures of both, it was held that such a procedure defeated the very object with which a Bench is constituted and the judgment was set aside.[3]

3. Powers of Benches.—Under this section it is open to the local Government to invest a Bench composed of Magistrate of a lower class with all the ordinary powers conferred on a Magistrate of a higher class, and also, if it thinks fit, to invest such Bench with the additional powers conferrable on a Magistrate of such higher class. That is to say, a Bench composed of Magistrates having third class magisterial powers may be invested with the ordinary or additional powers of a second class Magistrate.[1]

The phrase "any powers" refers to the power of any particular class of Magistrates either conferred or conferrable and does not mean any one of the powers conferred without the other. Thus it is not competent to the Local Government to invest a Bench of Magistrates with the incidental or ordinary powers of a second class Magistrate without having powers to try second class cases or to invest a Bench with the additional powers of a second class Magistrate without having other powers conferred by the Code on a second class Magistrate.[2] Where a notification of a Local Government issued under this section purported to invest a Bench of Magistrates, individuals of which had third class powers, with the ordinary powers of a second class Magistrate, but did not expressly invest the Bench with jurisdiction to try offences cognisable by a Magistrate of the second class, it was held that the Court could supply the omission in the notification and that the Bench must be taken to have been vested with powers to try offences triable by second class Magistrates.[3]

Powers to constitute a Bench is different from the powers which it exercises. See Note 3, Pt. 3.

1. Legislative Changes.—

There was no section in the Code of 1861 corresponding to this section. It corresponds to Ss. 52 and 53 of the Code of 1872.

Section 53 of the Code of 1882 gave power to the District Magistrate to vary or annul from time to time any rules made by himself or his predecessor under S. 52, subject to the orders of the Local Government. But S. 16 of the Code of 1882 provided that the Local Government or subject to its control the District Magistrate may from time to time make rules consistent with this Code.

There has been no change since 1882.

2. Classes of cases to be tried.—It has been expressed in the undermentioned cases[1] that it is not desirable to place before a Bench of Magistrates cases involving difficult questions of fact or law, though the Local Government or the District Magistrate has the power to do so.

Where a rule framed under this section by the Government of Burma provided that the District Magistrate should transfer to a Bench invested with second class powers such cases only as it can try summarily, but notwithstanding 52. The Magistrate of the District may frame rules for guidance of Benches.

The Magistrate of the District may, subject to the general orders of the Local Government, make rules for the guidance of Magistrates' Benches in his district.

Such rules shall not be inconsistent with the provisions of this Act, and may deal with the following subjects:—

The classes of cases to be tried;

The times and places of sitting;

The constitution of the Bench for conducting trials;

The mode of settling differences of opinion which may arise between the Magistrates in Session.

Magistrate of District may vary or annul rules made under Section 52.

53. The Magistrate of the District may, subject to the like orders, vary or annul, from time to time, any rules made by himself or by his predecessor under the last preceding section.

this rule a case was transferred to a Bench triable by it, but not summarily and the Bench tried the case in the ordinary manner, it was held that the Bench had the power to try the case,[2] the reason being that the case was within the competence of a second class Bench of Magistrates and the Rule did not lay down directly that the only classes of cases which they are to deal with were cases which they could try summarily. S. 16, Notes 2—4.

An offence under S. 3, sub-S. 12 of the Madras Towns Nuisance Act (III of 1889) falls within Rule 1, Clause 2 of the Rules framed by the Madras Government under this section and is therefore triable by a Bench of Magistrates.[3]

3. Constitution of Benches.—See S. 350-A infra.

4. Difference of opinion.—The Government of Bengal framed a rule under this section in 1905 providing that when the number of members of a Bench is even and they are equally divided in opinion, the view of the chairman shall prevail. The High Court of Calcutta held that this rule was not inconsistent with the Code and therefore was not ultra vires, but that it was highly undesirable.[1] Accordingly a fresh rule was issued in 1906 by the same Government which provides that in such circumstances the case shall be referred back to the District Magistrate or the Sub-divisional Magistrate.[2]

According to the rules made by the Government of the United Provinces, where an even number of Magistrates constituting a Bench are equally divided in opinion, the accused is entitled to an acquittal.[3] The High Court of Allahabad has held that the principle of this rule should be applied even to a case to which this rule has not been expressly made applicable and that a reference by the Bench to the District Magistrate is irregular and is not justified by any of the provisions of this Code.[4]

17*. (1) All Magistrates appointed under sections 12, 13 and 14, and all Benches constituted under section 15, shall be subordinate to the District Magistrate, and he may, from time to time, make rules or give special orders consistent with S. 17.

1. Legislative changes.—Originally there was no section in the Code of 1861 corresponding to this section. S. 23-G introduced by the amending Act, of 1869 provided for the subordination of Divisional Magistrates to the Magistrate of the District.

The second para of S. 37 of the Code of 1872 corresponds to Sub-Ss. 1 and 5 of this section and S. 41 of the Code of 1872 corresponds to Sub-S. 2.

Difference between the Codes of 1872 and 1882—

1. The power to make rules conferred on the District Magistrate by Sub-S. 1 of this section was first introduced in S. 17 of the Code of 1882.

(CODE OF 1861—Nil.)

S. 17, Notes 1—5.

2. Sub-S. 3 was newly added.

Difference between the Codes of 1882 and 1898—

1. In Sub-S. 1 after the words "make rules", the words "or give special orders" were inserted in 1898.

2. Sub-S. 4 of this section was newly inserted in the Code of 1898.

2. Nature and extent of subordination of Magistrates to the District Magistrate.—The subordination of a Magistrate to the Magistrate of the District is not only in respect of his executive, but is also in respect of his judicial functions.[1] Thus the District Magistrate has power:—

1. to act under S. 350, infra.
2. to set aside under certain circumstances a conviction recorded by a first class Magistrate.
3. to call for records and proceedings under S. 435, infra.
4. to hear an appeal, under S. 406, infra, against an order passed by a Magistrate of the first class;
5. to transfer and withdraw appeals under S. 407, infra; and
6. to hear appeals from orders passed under S. 514, infra or to revise them under S. 515, infra.

It is competent to the District Magistrate to supervise the Courts subordinate to him and give general instructions as to procedure, punishments and other matters of discretion. Thus, if he considers that the too frequent appearance of pleaders for the prosecution in petty criminal cases is detrimental to the interests of justice, he may give general instructions to the Subordinate Magistracy on the subject of allowing pleaders to appear for the prosecution.[2] But the subordination of Magistrates does not extend so far as to justify the issuing of orders which may have the effect of fettering or controlling the judicial discretion of such subordinate Magistrates which by law vests in them alone.[3]

3. Subordination of Sub-Divisional Magistrate.—A Sub-Divisional Magistrate is subordinate to the District Magistrate.[1]

4. Subordination of Cantonment Magistrates.—The Cantonment Magistrate is expressly made subordinate to the District Magistrate by S. 7 of the Cantonments Act (XIII of 1889).[1]

5. Subordination of Additional District Magistrates.—See Note 6, to S. 10, supra.

6. Subordination of Magistrates to Sub-Divisional Magistrates.—A Magistrate attached to a Sub-Division is subordinate to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of that sub-division.[1] A Magistrate who is subordinate to a Sub-Divisional Magistrate is also subordinate to the District Magistrate. The jurisdiction of the latter is not ousted or excluded by that of the former; their jurisdictions are co-ordinate.[2]

7. Subordination of Magistrates to Sessions Judge.—Sub-S. 5 of this section provides that neither the District Magistrate nor the other Magistrates shall be subordinate to the Sessions Judge except so far as is expressly provided for in the Code.[1] As to such express provisions to the contrary see the following sections:—Ss. 123, 193, 195, 408, 435 and 436.

8. Subordination of Assistant and Additional Sessions Judges.—There is a distinction between the position of an Additional Sessions Judge and that of an Asssistant Sessions Judge. Sub-S. 3 of this section provides that Assistant Sessions Judges shall be subordinate to the Sessions Judge. But there is no provision in the Code as to the subordination of the Additional Sessions Judge.[1]

As to the power of a Sessions Judge to withdraw cases from the files of Assistant and Additional Sessions Judges see notes to S. 528, infra.

9. Distribution of business among Magistrates.—The powers of a District Magistrate under this section include the distribution of business among subordinate Magistrates. The section does not empower him to stay proceedings pending before subordinate Magistrates.[1] The power of the District Magistrate to allocate work under this section is confined to allocation of work among Magistrates who are for the time being his subordinates. Thus, where a Magistrate is transferred from a District, the Magistrate of that district has no longer any authority to make any arrangement in regard to the work of the Magistrate so transferred.[2]

The District Magistrate cannot delegate his powers of distributing business; the power is confined to him and cannot be exercised by a Magistrate in charge of a sub-division or by any other Magistrate. Therefore, the order of a District Magistrate authorising or directing the senior Honorary Magistrate to distribute work among other Honorary Magistrates is ultra vires.[3]

Power to grant or cancel bail could be conferred on him under Sub-S. 4 of this section. (1898) 1898 Rat. 968 (969), In re Olive Durant (Bombay Rule 9, refers only to division of work and does not justify a Presidency Magistrate in ordering a return of a complaint on the ground that the case may be more conveniently tried by the chief).

3. Mode of settling differences of opinion—rules relating to.—It was held by the High Court of Calcutta in Henry Wakefield v. Haran Sardar[1] that a rule made under this section directing that, in a Bench composed of two members, the opinion of the Chairman shall prevail, was ultra vires in that it was inconsistent with the provisions of this Code and was also arbitrary and not consonant with natural justice. In a later Full Bench decision arising under a similar rule framed under S. 16, ante the same High Court has held that such a rule is not ultra vires. See notes to S. 16. It is therefore submitted that the decision in Henry Wakefield's case must be held to be impliedly overruled by the Full Bench decision.

Where a rule by the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Bombay provided that every member of a Bench shall have a voice in the determination of a case and that when a Bench is equally divided in opinion the Chairman shall have a casting vote, it was held that the judgment of the dissenting Magistrate if any, should form part of the record.[2] The reason is that otherwise, the appellate or revisional court would not be in a position to know whether the judgment is a concurrent judgment of two Judges or is a judgment of the Chairman dissented from by the other members of the Bench.

4. Subordination of Magistrates.—The Governments of Bombay and Calcutta have declared that all Presidency Magistrates (whether sitting singly or as members) of a Bench are subordinate to the Chief Presidency Magistrate in the same manner and to the same extent as ordinary magistrates are subordinate to the District Magistrate under S. 17, ante.[1] The Chief Presidency Magistrate has, therefore, power under S. 528 infra to withdraw any case from the file of a Presidency Magistrate either to his own file,[2] or to transfer it for enquiry to any other Presidency Magistrate.[3]

The Government of Madras have directed that the subordination of a Presidency Magistrate shall be limited to the purposes of S. 124, sub-S. 1, Section 144, sub-S. 4, S. 192 and S. 528 of the Code.[4]

It has been held by the Calcutta High Court that by virtue of S. 18, sub-S. 4, Presidency Magistrates who are declared to be subordinate to the Chief Presidency Magistrate should be treated as subordinate to the Additional Chief Presidency Magistrate also.[5]

1. Justices of the Peace.—A Justice of the Peace is an inferior magistrate appointed to preserve the peace in any part of the country. Certain persons are Justices of the Peace in virtue of their office (see S. 25) and others, by virtue of being appointed as such. Justices of the Peace were first appointed in India by the Royal Charter of 1726 by which Governors and certain Councillors were created Justices of the Peace. The Royal Charter of 1753 replaced that of 1726 with certain changes. Under several subsequent Acts of Parliament various persons were constituted Justices of the Peace.[1] In the year 1869 the power to appoint Justices of the Peace in India was given to the Governor-General-in-Council and the Governors-in-Council, but a distinction was made in respect of appointments to be made for territories outside the Presidency Towns and those to be made for the Presidency Towns. In respect of the former, originally, only covenanted Civil Servants and other British Subjects and later, only European British Subjects could be appointed Justices of the Peace. In respect of the latter any person resident in British India and not being the subject of a foreign state could be appointed a Justice of the Peace. The distinction continued to exist till the year 1923, when by Act XII of that year it was abolished by the repeal of S. 23 of the Code and by the amendment of S. 22 empowering the Local Governments to appoint any person resident within British India and not being resident of a foreign state to be a Justice of the Peace in any area subject to its administration.

As to the powers of a Justice of the Peace, there is no provision in the Code showing what his special duties are as distinguished from a Magistrate in the ordinary sense. Their powers are prescribed by various special and local enactments and also by the terms of their appointment. Thus the justices appointed in 1726 and 1753 by the Charters 13 George 1 and 26 George II had the same powers as the Justices in any County, City or Towns Corporate in England and could hold quarter sessions. See also the following enactments.[2] In Reg v. Reay,[3] the High Court of Bombay observed that the power of a Justice of the Peace in India had never been placed on a clear footing. It was further observed that a Justice of the Peace might still possibly exercise the powers vested in Justices in 1726, but that, as to any further powers, they could only be such as are conferred by Act of Parliament or other competent authority.

A.—Description of Offences cognizable by each Court.

Offences under Penal Code.

28. Subject to the other provisions of this Code, any offence under the Indian Penal Code may be tried by the High Court or Court of Session or by any other Court by which such offence is shown in the eighth column of the second schedule to be triable.

What Courts to try offences.

7. All criminal trials in British India shall be held before the Courts specified in the fourth schedule to this Act, or before the Courts specified in any law by which the offence is created, according to the provisions hereinafter contained.

By what Courts the offences mentioned in the Schedule are triable and within what limits such Courts may pass sentence.

22. The offences mentioned in the Schedule annexed to this Act shall, subject to the provision contained in the third explanatory note prefixed to the said Schedule, be triable by the Courts specified in Column 7 of the said Schedule, and such Courts shall be competent to pass sentence in respect of such offences within the following limits, (that is to say).

(3rd Explanatory Note in the Schedule).

3rd.—Offences may be tried by a Court superior to the Court specifically mentioned in Column 7. For example, a Court of Session may try an offence entered in Column 7 as triable by a Magistrate.

1. Scope of the section.—This and the following sections deal with the description of offences cognizable by the several Courts constituted under the Code. Any offence under the Penal Code can, subject to the other provisions of the Code, be tried by the High Court or the Court of Session. But an offence can be tried by any other Court only if it is mentioned in the eighth column of the second schedule of the Code as being triable by such Court. In other words, the High Court and the Court of Session have concurrent jurisdiction with the Subordinate Courts over offences triable by the latter.[1] But a Magistrate who is not mentioned in the eighth column of the second schedule as being empowered to try a particular offence, has no jurisdiction to try it.[2] Neither the consent of the parties thereto[3] nor even an Order of the District Magistrate authorising the Magistrate to try the case[4] will confer any jurisdiction on such Magistrate to do so.

The fact that the offence which a Magistrate is not empowered to try includes a minor offence which he is authorised to try cannot give him jurisdiction to try the accused for the former offence.[5] Nor can Magistrates clutch jurisdiction by intentionally ignoring facts of aggravation which make the offence cognizable only by a higher tribunal.[6] He cannot for instance, split up a graver offence into a number of smaller offences and thus give himself jurisdiction.[7] On the other hand, the jurisdiction of a Magistrate to try the accused for an offence triable by him is not ousted merely by the fact that the accused is liable to be charged for an offence not triable by him.[8] Whether in so trying he adopts a proper course is a different question. No doubt it will be improper on the part of the Magistrate intentionally to ignore circumstances which show that an offence beyond his jurisdiction was in fact committed as well as an offence within his jurisdiction. Thus if a Second Class Magistrate should ignore the violence used in committing theft and, instead of sending the accused before a First class Magistrate to be tried for robbery, tries the case for theft, the action would be improper but his proceedings could not be void for want of jurisdiction.[9]

The jurisdiction of a Court to hear a case depends on the allegations with which its help is sought. The statement of a complainant in a criminal case and the statement of the plaintiff in a Civil case has to be accepted for the purpose of jurisdiction.[10]

As to the jurisdiction of summary Courts under Ordinance II of 1921, see the undermentioned case.[11]

2. "Subject to other provisions of the Code."—The jurisdiction which is conferred by this section on a Magistrate to try an offence which is shown in the eighth column of the second schedule to be triable by him is a qualified one, and is subject to other provisions of the Code. Thus under S. 207 the Magistrate should not try but should commit the case to the Court of Session or the High Court where he is of opinion that it ought to be tried by such Court. Similarly S. 254 provides that the Magistrate shall try an accused person only for an offence which, in his opinion, can be adequately punished by him.[1]

1. Scope of section.—Section 28, ante prescribes the Courts by which offences under the Penal Code can be tried. This section prescribes the Courts by which offences under other laws can be tried. In the case of such offences, if a Court is specified in the particular enactment by which the offence is created, as having jurisdiction to try the offence, it is only such Court that can try the offence.[1] If no such Court is specified in the enactment creating the offence, it can be tried by the High Court or by any Court specified in this behalf in the second schedule to the Code.[2]

Offences cognizable by Criminal Courts.

21. The Criminal Courts of the several grades, according to the powers vested in them respectively by this Act, shall have jurisdiction in respect of offences punishable under the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) or under any special or local law (except offences which are by any such law made punishable by some other authority therein specially mentioned), and in the investigation and trial of the offences hereby declared to be within their jurisdiction, shall be guided by the provisions of this Act.

S. 29, Note 1.

The jurisdiction conferred by the section is expressly made subject to the other provisions of the Code. Similarly, it is subject to the provisions of the law under which the offence is alleged to have been committed. Thus, the Railways Act does not specially mention any Courts as competent to try offences under it and consequently, under this section, the jurisdiction to try such offences lies in the Courts mentioned in the second schedule to the Code. These Courts include, inter alia, Magistrates of the third class. But, under S. 133 of the Railways Act, no Magistrate whose powers are less than those of a Second Class Magistrate can try any offence under the Act. Hence, a Third Class Magistrate cannot try any offence under the Railways Act though such offence may be within his jurisdiction if the matter were governed solely by this section and the second schedule.[3]

SCOPE OF THE SECTION .. .. .. Note No. 1

1. Scope of the section.—Under the Code of 1861, only the High Court had jurisdiction over European British Subjects.[1] The Codes of 1872 and 1882 gave certain Magistrates power to try offences against such persons.[2] Under S. 443 of the Code as it stood before the Amending Act (12 of 1923) no Magistrate, unless he was a Justice of the Peace and, (except in the case of a District Magistrate or Presidency Magistrate) unless he was a Magistrate of the first class and an European British Subject, could inquire into or try any charge against an European British Subject.[3] That section has now been repealed and, under the present section, no second or third class

SCOPE OF THE SECTION	1
"OTHER THAN ONE PUNISHABLE WITH DEATH OR TRANSPORTATION FOR LIFE"	2
"MAY BE TRIED"	3
"OR IN ANY AREA IN WHICH THE SAID ACT HAS BEEN REPEALED"	4

1. Scope of the section.—This section was newly added by the Amending Act 18 of 1923. The reasons for so introducing it in the Code have thus been stated in the statement of objects and reasons for that Act:—

"The existing procedure of committal to a Court of Sessions is lengthy and often involves the prolonged detention of juvenile offenders as under-trial prisoners, although the offences generally committed by them seldom require to be so severely punished as to necessitate the intervention of a Sessions Court, the sentence or order eventually passed being often incommensurate with the time and energy expended upon a committal and sessions trial". Offences committed by juvenile offenders are therefore made triable by the judicial officers specified in the section instead of by the Sessions Court, unless the offences are so serious as to be punishable by death or transportation for life.

2. "Other than one punishable with death or transportation for life." —This section empowers the Magistrates referred to therein to try any offence (other than one punishable with death or transportation for life) although, such offence apart from this section would be beyond their competence to try.[1]

(1) (1934) 1934 Bom. 211 (212), Emperor v.

S. 29-B, Notes 2—4.

An offence under S. 304 of the Penal Code is one punishable with transportation for life and cannot therefore be tried by the Magistrate in charge of the Central Children Court who is specially empowered under S. 8 of the Reformatory Schools Act 1897.[2]

3. "May be tried".—The words "may be tried" are permissive and a Magistrate other than one of those specified in the section before whom a juveline offender is brought, has a discretion to direct that the accused be dealt with under this section by one of the Magistrates specified therein or to deal with the case himself.[1] In the latter case however, he should have jurisdiction under Ss. 28 or 29 ante to try such case. Thus an offence under S. 130 of the Railways Act (9 of 1890) which is punishable under that section only with whipping and which is not specified to be triable by any Magistrate, in the second schedule of the Code can be tried under the provisions of S. 29, sub-S. 2 only by the High Court, or, under this section by the Magistrate therein specified.[2]

4. "Or in any area in which the said act has been....repealed".—See the Madras Children Act 1920, and the undermentioned cases.[1] See also the following cases[2] as to how youthful offenders are to be dealt with under other Acts.

1. Legislative Changes.—Under the Code of 1861, Ss. 445-A and B, a full power Magistrate could try a case committed to him, as a Court of Session. But since the Code of 1872 a Magistrate specially empowered has power to try cases only as a Magistrate and not as a Court of Session.[1]

The Codes of 1872 and 1882 permitted the conferment of special powers only to District Magistrates. The Code of 1898 allows of other First Class Magistrates being invested with such powers.

2. Scope and object.—The object of conferring special powers on District Magistrates is to accelerate proceedings at the trial by avoiding the delay consequent on commitment to the Sessions Court. It is also intended to afford relief to those who have to attend as witnesses in the Court.[1] As to the sentence that can be passed by specially empowered Magistrates, see S. 34.

Powers with which Dy. Commissioners and chief executive officers of District may be invested.

In the territories subject to the Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab, and in the territories administered by the Chief Commissioners of Oudh, the Central Provinces and British Burma, in Coorg, and in those parts of the other provinces in which there are Deputy Commissioners or Assistant Commissioners the Local Government may invest the Deputy Commissioner, or other chief officer charged with the executive administration of the District in criminal matters, with power to try as a Magistrate all offences not punishable with death, and to pass sentence of imprisonment for a term not exceeding seven years, including such solitary confinement as is authorized by law, or of fine, or of whipping, or any combination of these punishments authorized by law; but any sentence of upwards of three years' imprisonment passed by any such officer shall be subject to the confirmation of the Sessions Judge to whom such Deputy Commissioner is subordinate. Such Sessions Judge may either confirm, modify or annul any sentence referred for confirmation.

3. "As a Magistrate".—The section makes it clear that the cases tried by the specially empowered Magistrate shall be tried by him as a Magistrate. Hence if he tenders pardon under S. 337 he is precluded from trying the case himself.[1] Nor can a committal be made to him.[2] Where a case was committed under the Code of 1861 to a full power Magistrate as Sessions case, but at the time of the receipt of the case by the Magistrate the new Code of 1872 came into force and deprived the Magistrate of the power to try cases as a Court of Session, it was held that the Magistrate had no power to ignore the order of committal and deal with the case under S. 36.[3]

A Magistrate of the First class who is holding a preliminary enquiry into a case triable by a Court of Session has jurisdiction either to commit it to a Court of Session or to discharge the accused. He cannot make over the case to a District Magistrate specially empowered under S. 30. Where, however, no prejudice had been caused to the accused by reason of his having been convicted by a District Magistrate instead of by the Sessions Court, the conviction was maintained.[4]

The fact that a case described in the eighth column of Sch. II as one triable by a Court of Session is tried by a Magistrate specially empowered, does not however alter its nature or make it a case "triable by a Magistrate" within the meaning of S. 250. Hence a Magistrate trying such a case cannot award compensation. The words "triable by a Magistrate" occurring in S. 250, must mean triable under S. 28 of the Code by a Magistrate.[5]

4. Procedure.—The Court of the District Magistrate exercising enhanced powers is nevertheless not constituted a Court of Session thereby, but remains that of a Magistrate and the procedure for the trial is regulated by Chap. XXI and not by Chap. XXIII.[1]

A Magistrate acting under this section has no power to try an accused person summarily.[2]

5. "All offences not punishable with death".—This section must be read as qualifying Ss. 28 and 29 of the Code. All offences not punishable with death may be tried by Magistrates empowered under this section notwithstanding that under Ss. 28 and 29 they are triable by the Courts specified in the 8th column of the second schedule of the Code.[1] Thus a person accused under S. 120-B of the Penal Code of being a party to a criminal conspiracy to commit an offence punishable with death, can, according to the second schedule be tried only by a Court of Session. This section will enable a Magistrate empowered under it, to try the case provided no murder has taken place in pursuance of the conspiracy.[2] S. 30, Notes 5—6.

Where a case is prima facie one of murder a Magistrate specially empowered under this section has no power to try it.[3] Where there is evidence which, if believed, would sustain a charge of murder, it is undesirable that the Magistrate should, under this section, try the case for a minor offence.[4]

There is a conflict of opinion as to whether an offence of culpable homicide not amounting to murder is one that can be tried by a Magistrate empowered under this section. According to the Chief Court of Punjab it is not, the reason being that the Criminal Procedure Code does not contemplate a charge under the first part of S. 304 independently of a charge under S. 302 (murder) inasmuch as culpable homicide is prima facie murder unless the accused is able to show that he comes within any of the exceptions to S. 300.[5] The Judicial Commissioner's Court of Peshawar has, on the other hand, held that there is no want of jurisdiction in the specially empowered Magistrate trying an offence under the first part of S. 304 though the proper thing to do is to commit the case to the Sessions Court and not to try the case himself.[6]

Cases on the border line of jurisdiction and cases of great difficulty ought to be committed rather than be tried by the Magistrate under this section.[7] As a general rule the cases which a Magisrate empowered under S. 30 should refrain from trying are firstly, those in which a sentence more severe than he could inflict under S. 34, infra, appears to be called for and secondly, those cases in which the issues are so complex, or the difficulty of ascertaining the true facts or of correctly applying the law to them so considerable as to make a trial before a Sessions Judge with the aid of assessors more appropriate than a trial before a Magistrate under this section.[8]

Where a Sessions Judge is of opinion that a Magistrate empowered under S. 30 has tried a case which he was not competent to try, he should send the case to the High Court for an order that the accused be committed for trial to the Court of Session.[9]

Though a case may be triable by a specially empowered Magistrate he is not precluded from committing it to a Court of Session if there are good reasons for his doing so.[10]

6. Revision.—A Court of a Magistrate exercising enhanced powers and trying cases triable by a Court of Session is nevertheless not a Court of co-ordinate jurisdiction but is inferior to a Sessions Court and subject to its revisional powers.[1] A Magistrate who is not a District Magistrate, but is invested

1. Legislative Changes.—Under the Code of 1872 an assistant Sessions Judge had no power to award a sentence of transportation or to commute a sentence of imprisonment to one of transportation.[1] Both under the Codes of 1872 and 1882 a sentence of imprisonment for a term exceeding three years passed by an Assistant Sessions Judge was subject to confirmation by the Sessions Judge and even when an Assistant Sessions Judge passed sentences under Any sentence of more than three years imprisonment passed by an Assistant Sessions Judge shall be subject to confirmation by the Sessions Judge. The Sessions Judge may either confirm, modify or annul such sentence of the Assistant Sessions Judge.

By what Courts the offences mentioned in the schedule are triable and within what limits such Courts may pass sentence.

22. The offences mentioned in the schedule annexed to this Act shall, subject to the provision contained in the third explanatory note prefixed to the said schedule, be triable by the Courts specified in Column 7 of the said schedule, and such Courts shall be competent to pass sentence in respect of such offences within the following limits, (that is to say).

Powers of Court of Session.

The Court of Session. Death (subject to confirmation by the Sudder Court). Transportation, imprisonment of either description for a period not exceeding fourteen years, including such solitary confinement as is authorized by law, or fine to an unlimited amount, or both transportation and fine or imprisonment and fine, in cases in which both punishments are authorized by the Indian Penal Code. In cases in which, according to the Indian Penal Code, forfeiture of property may be adjudged, the Court of Session may adjudge such forfeiture in addition to the sentence.

Assistant Sessions Judges in Bombay.

In the Presidency of Bombay it shall be lawful for a Sessions Judge to delegate cases for trial by an Assistant Sessions Judge; and such Assistant Sessions Judge shall be competent in such cases to pass sentences within the following limits:—Imprisonment of either description for a term not exceeding seven years (including such solitary confinement as is authorized by law), or fine, or both. If the sentence be one of imprisonment for a term exceeding three years, it shall be passed subject to confirmation by the Sessions Judge. The Sessions Judge may review and hear appeals against the proceedings of his Assistants, and may confirm and amend (but not so as to enhance), or may reverse their sentences or orders. It shall not be competent to an Assistant Sessions Judge to review or hear an appeal against the proceedings of a Magistrate. ed to be a single sentence, for purposes of confirmation.[2] When a sentence was referred to the Sessions Judge for confirmation he had no power to enhance it.[3]

Under Act IV of 1862 (repealed by Act X of 1872) a Sessions Judge could pass a sentence of death.[4] Now, however, death sentences passed by a Sessions Judge are operative only on confirmation by the High Court.[5]

2. "Any sentence authorised by Law".—The punishment of penal servitude is applicable only to Europeans and Americans and its infliction on others is illegal.[1] The punishment of forfeiture formerly provided by Ss. 61 and 62 of the Penal Code has now been done away with by the repeal of those sections. Even when such a punishment was provided for it was held that it could be imposed only in rare cases of an exceptionally atrocious character.[2]

3. Solitary confinement and whipping.—Solitary confinement cannot be awarded for an offence not punishable under the Penal Code but under a Local Act.[1] Nor can it be awarded where the substantive punishment awarded does not include imprisonment but only fine.[2] Cumulative sentences of solitary confinement are contrary to the intention of S. 73 of the Indian Penal Code.[3] (See S. 73 of the Penal Code).

If a sentence of whipping is passed under S. 3 of the Whipping Act no other punishment can be awarded,[4] but in respect of offences falling under S. 4 of the said Act whipping may be awarded either in addition to or in lieu of any other punishment.[5] An offender who does not come under Ss. 3, 4 or 5 of the Whipping Act cannot be punished with whipping.[6]

4. Transportation.—Under S. 559 of the Penal Code transportation can be substituted for imprisonment by the Court which sentences the offender. As to conditions under which this could be done see S. 59 of the Penal Code and the undermentioned cases.[1] Under Sec. 59 of the Penal Code transportation cannot be given for an offence under a special or Local Act[2] and the section does not authorise the substitution of transportation for imprisonment when the imprisonment is awarded not as a substantive sentence but in default of payment of a fine.[3] If a Court awards transportation under S. 75 of the Penal Code it must be for life[4] but read with S. 59 it may commute a sentence of imprisonment to one of transportation for not less than 7 years but not exceeding 10 years.[5] S. 31, Notes 4—5.

5. Imprisonment.—Punishment by imprisonment under the Penal Code means that the offender shall go to jail. As to the propriety of passing a sentence of imprisonment till the rising of the Court see Note 4 to S. 32 infra.

An order directing that any period undergone as an under-trial prisoner should be considered as part of the sentence, is illegal.[1] Under S. 75 of the Penal Code on a second conviction a sentence of imprisonment for more than double the prescribed term is illegal.[2] S. 64 of the Penal Code prohibits only the running of a term of imprisonment in default of fine concurrently with a previously awarded term of imprisonment and it is not strictly illegal to order that a term of imprisonment subsequently ordered should run concurrently with a term of imprisonment being undergone at the time in default of payment of a fine. But such an order is opposed to the spirit of S. 64 and should not be passed.[3]

An order sending an offender to a reformatory school cannot be passed in default of fine but only where the offender is sentenced to imprisonment or transportation.[4]

Sentences which Magistrates may pass.

The powers of Magistrates in respect to the trial of offences and to passing sentences on persons convicted of them are as follows:—

S. 32, Note 1.

1. Legislative Changes.—

Difference between the Codes of 1861 and 1872—

At the time when the Code of 1861 was passed, whipping was not a punishment which could be awarded under the Penal Code.[1] Subsequently, however, the Whipping Act (VI of 1864) was passed and the punishment of whipping was thereby recognised in certain cases; such punishment was to be considered as one of the penalties prescribed by the Penal Code.[2] Under S. 8 of the Act VI of 1864 a Magistrate of the District, a Subordinate Magistrate of the first class or a specially empowered Magistrate could pass a sentence of whipping.[3] The Code of 1872 introduced the provision as to whip-

Fine to the extent of one thousand rupees;
Whipping.

Powers of Magistrates, Second Class.

Imprisonment not exceeding six months (including such solitary confinement as is authorized by law);
Fine not exceeding two hundred rupees;
Whipping.

Powers of Magistrates, Third Class.

Fine not exceeding fifty rupees.

A Magistrate of the third class may not pass a sentence of solitary confinement, or of whipping.

Any Magistrate may pass any lawful sentence; combining any of the sentences which he is authorized by law to pass.

The Magistrate of the District or other officer authorized to exercise the powers of a Magistrate. Imprisonment of either description not exceeding the term of two years, including such solitary confinement as is authorized by law, or fine to the extent of one thousand rupees, or both imprisonment and fine in all cases in which both punishments are authorized by the Indian Penal Code.

Powers of the Magistrate of the District.

Subordinate Magistrates or Officers authorized to exercise any of the powers of a Magistrate:—

First Class.—Imprisonment of either description not exceeding six months, or fine not exceeding two hundred rupees, or both imprisonment and fine in all cases in which both punishments are authorized by the Indian Penal Code.

Powers of Subordinate Magistrates, First Class.

Second Class.—Imprisonment of either description not exceeding one month, or fine not exceeding fifty rupees, or both imprisonment and fine in all cases in which both punishments are authorized by the Indian Penal Code.

Powers of Subordinate Magistrates, Second Class.

No sentence of solitary confinement, under Section 73 of the Indian Penal Code, shall be passed by any Court inferior to an Officer exercising the powers of a Magistrate.

ping in S. 20 thereof and S. 8 of the Act VI of 1864 was repealed. According to S. 20 of the Code of 1872, a sentence of whipping could be passed by a Magistrate of the first class or second class.

2. A sentence of solitary confinement could, under the Code of 1861, be only passed by an officer exercising powers not less than that of a Magistrate—corresponding to First Class Magistrate under the Code of 1872. Under the latter Code, even a Second Class Magistrate had such power.

3. The powers given to the Magistrate of the District, or officer exercising the powers of a Magistrate (which meant the full powers of a Magistrate), a Subordinate Magistrate of the first class and a Subordinate Magistrate of the second class under the Code of 1861, were conferred on Magistrates of the first class, second class and third class respectively under the Code of 1872.

Differences between the Codes of 1872 and 1882—

Under sub-S. 3 of S. 32 of the Code of 1882 a Second Class Magistrate could pass a sentence of whipping only when he was specially empowered in that behalf by the Local Government.[4]

Change made in 1898—

The words "if specially empowered" were added after the word "whipping" in sub-S. 1 (b) to conform to sub-S. 3 of the Code of 1882.

Change made in 1909—

Sub-S. 3 and the words "whipping, if specially empowered" in sub-S. 1 (b) were repealed by the Whipping Act IV of 1909. A Second Class Magistrate cannot now pass a sentence of whipping.

2. Scope of the Section.—This section lays down the extent of the punishment which a Magistrate by his ordinary jurisdiction, is competent to inflict[1] and Ss. 36 and 37 infra deal with the ordinary and additional powers of Magistrates under the Code in other respects. A Magistrate cannot exceed the limit prescribed by the section and pass a sentence which he is not authorised to pass.[2] Thus he cannot sentence a person under S. 75 of the Penal Code as being a previous offender and award an enhanced punishment exceeding the limits of his power under this section.[3] Even a request on the part of the accused will not enable him to do so.[4] Nor can a Magistrate acting under S. 395 infra inflict any sentence exceeding his limit.[5] Similarly a Magistrate even though specially empowered under S. 30 cannot, when exercising his ordinary powers, pass a sentence greater than that allowed by this section.[6] Again an Appellate Court, in varying a sentence, is bound by the limitations imposed by this section on the trial Court. Thus where the Appellate Court affirmed the conviction passed by a Magistrate of the second class but changed the sentence from one of three months simple imprisonment to one of fine of four hundred rupees, the sentence was held to be illegal.[7] The High Court, however, has under S. 439 infra power to enhance the sentence beyond the power of the trying Magistrate the limit of such enhancement being the sentence that could be passed by a Presidency Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class not specially empowered under S. 30.[8] S. 32, Notes 2—3.

The provisions of this section do not affect the powers of a Magistrate under S. 106 to bind over a person to keep the peace for a period exceeding that for which he can pass a sentence of imprisonment under S. 32. Thus a Second Class Magistrate, who is also a Sub-Divisional Magistrate, is not limited by this section from binding over a person to keep the peace for a period of six months only but can go as far as S. 106 allows even though the order carries with it an alternative sentence of imprisonment if the security is not furnished.[9]

3. General principles as to punishments.—The mere fact that, under this section a Magistrate can award a punishment not exceeding a certain limit, does not mean that the maximum punishment prescribed by Law should follow automatically upon the conviction.[1] Such punishment should be awarded only in extreme cases.[2] The Magistrate should exercise a judicial discretion in each case and pass an adequate sentence after taking into consideration all the pertinent circumstances of the case,[3] such as on sudden provocation,[6] or in excess of the right of self-defence,[7] or that the accused has made a confession[8] or in cases of defamation or abuse, has made an immediate apology[9] or the fact that in cases of rape or abduction, the woman was a consenting party[10] or was unchaste[11] is a mitigating circumstance to be considered in awarding punishment. On the one hand the theory of deterrent punishment should not be loosely put into practice except where there is a danger of a wide breach of the peace or security.[12] Thus in cases where a gang of desperate men or an unlawful assembly, threatens to defy the law, the heaviest possible sentence should be passed.[13] Similarly the following crimes should also be punished with a deterrent sentence.

On the other hand an accused person is not entitled to get off merely because he is a person of high position and one who has done good service for the Government in the past[23] or because he belongs to a particular caste or community.[24]

A sentence of two years' imprisonment on a juvenile offender will be improper when his adult co-accused with three previous convictions, is awarded only one year's imprisonment.[25] A sentence of solitary confinement, is salutary in the case of old offender convicted of offences against property but is not suitable for persons convicted of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, committed in a moment of grave and sudden provocation.[26] Whipping is not a proper sentence in the case of an accused of some position.[27] But it is more appropriate than a fine[28] in the case of a juvenile offender or a sentence of imprisonment.[29] Cases of petty offences are more appropriately punished by fine than by imprisonment[30] and where it is possible to inflict a fine or a sentence of whipping, short terms of imprisonment should be avoided.[31] Imprisonment, for offences outside the Penal Code, should be given only as a last resort in cases of contumacy.[32]

A Magistrate who pronounces a sentence must define precisely the nature of the sentence intended, as well as the period of detention. Generally the sentence ought to be self-contained like a decree of a civil Court, so that the functionary who has to execute it should have nothing to do but to obey the direction given, without making an inquiry on his own account.[33] Where the Court awards the maximum punishment, it should give the reason therefor.[34]

4. Imprisonment.—Imprisonment may be rigorous or simple. But where the nature of the imprisonment is not specified when the sentence is passed, it must be taken to be simple[1] and where the Magistrate uses the phrase "I pass sentence under Ss. 326 and 148'' or whatever the section may be, it must be interpreted to mean that the Magistrate intended to pass concurrent sentences.[2]

A Magistrate has no jurisdiction in awarding a sentence to direct that any portion of the period during which the accused had been detained in custody, as an under-trial prisoner should be computed as part of the sentence.[3] But in estimating what should be the proper sentence, the Court can take into consideration the period of such detention.[4] A sentence of imprisonment until the rising of the Court is good and fulfils the requirements of the law.[5] It has however been held in the undermentioned case[6] of the Madras High Court that punishment by imprisonment means that the offender shall go to Jail, that imprisonment till the rising of the Court is a clear evasion of the intention of the statute but that possibly in rare cases where the offence is obviously technical a Court may be justified in taking the extreme step of evading the statute which it is appointed to administer.

It is not competent for a Magistrate to award imprisonment for several periods with interval between each period[7] or to order the accused to suffer imprisonment in a Police lock-up.[8]

A sentence of recurring terms of imprisonment for every breach of an order to pay maintenance, in anticipation of breach, is illegal.[9]

5. Solitary Confinement.—S. 73 of the Penal Code provides that whenever a person is convicted of an offence for which, under that Code the Court has power to sentence him to rigorous imprisonment, the Court may order the offender to be kept in solitary confinement for the period specified in that section and S. 74 of that Code. The punishment of solitary confinement cannot therefore be awarded for offences not under the Penal Code; but under a Special or Local Act in the absence of a provision therein for imposing such a punishment. Thus it has been held that no solitary confinement can be ordered in cases of convictions under:—

(6) The Opium Act.[6]

Again solitary confinement can be awarded only as part of a substantive sentence of imprisonment and not when such imprisonment is awarded in default of payment of fine,[7] or in default of furnishing security.[8] It can, however, be awarded in lieu of whipping under S. 395 infra.[9]

A solitary confinement may be ordered even in cases where the trial is a summary one.[10] As to extent and the mode of inflicting a sentence of solitary confinement, see Ss. 73 and 74 of the Penal Code and the following cases.[11]

6. Fine.—The maximum amount of fine for the payment of which the Court may sentence an offender is Rs. 1,000-0-0.[1] This is so in the case of all offences under the Penal Code. In the case of offences under any other law, the same Rule will apply except where it is otherwise provided by such law. See S. 5 ante and the following cases.[2] The power to punish with fine for separate offences is however not affected by this section even though the aggregate fine imposed in respect thereof exceed Rs. 1,000.[3] See S. 35 infra.

An order for payment of a daily fine, in anticipation, for offences not yet committed is illegal.[4]

S. 32, Note, 6.

In fixing the amount of fine within the limits prescribed under this section, the Court should have regard to the nature of the offence and the means of the accused to pay the fine imposed.[5] In cases of offences of an aggravated nature a sentence of imprisonment is more suitable than one of fine.[6]

Impositions of fines should be avoided where a death sentence[7] or any substantial term of imprisonment[8] is given. It is only suitable in the following cases :—

1. Where the Court considers that the justice of the case will be met by inflicting a fine but at the same time considers that a term of imprisonment in addition will serve as a salutary lesson to the accused.

2. Where it is desired to compensate the complainant; or

3. Where the accused has profitted financially by his misdeed.[9]

The above rule, however, is inapplicable to a conviction under an Ordinance, which specifically enacts that a fine shall be imposed along with a substantial term of imprisonment.[10]

7. Whipping.—See also note 1 above.

Whipping as a punishment is only awardable for offences under the Penal Code and not for offences under any other law,[1] unless the offender is a juvenile offender and the Governor-General in Council has specified in the Gazette of India such offence as being one in which whipping may be awarded as a punishment. 1. Legislative Changes.—In S. 309 of the Code of 1872 the third para read thus:—"Where a person is sentenced to fine only the Magistrate may award such term of imprisonment in default of payment of fine as is allowed by law, provided the amount does not exceed the Magistrate's powers under

20. Explanation:—A Magistrate may award imprisonment in default of payment of fine, in addition to the full term of imprisonment which, under this section, he is competent to award.

309. In every case punishable under any law in force for the time being with imprisonment as well as fine, in which the offender is sentenced to a fine, whether with or without imprisonment, the Criminal Courts shall be guided by the provisions of sections sixty-four and sixty-five of the Indian Penal Code in awarding the period of imprisonment in default of payment of the fine.

Provided that, in no case decided by a Magistrate, where imprisonment shall have been awarded as part of the substantive sentence, shall the period of imprisonment awarded in default of payment of the fine exceed one-fourth of the period of imprisonment which such Magistrate is competent to inflict as punishment for the offence, otherwise than as imprisonment in default of payment of the fine.

Proviso as to cases decided by a Magistrate.

Where a person is sentenced to fine only, the Magistrate may award such term of imprisonment in default of payment of fine as is allowed by law, provided the amount does not exceed the Magistrate's powers under this Act.

(CODE OF 1861—Section 45.)

45. In every case punishable with imprisonment as well as fine, in which the offender is sentenced to a fine, whether with or without imprisonment, the Criminal Courts shall be guided by the provisions of Sections 64 and 65 of the Indian Penal Code in awarding the period of imprisonment in default of payment of the fine.

Imprisonment in default of payment of fine.

Provided that in every such case decided by a Magistrate, the period of imprisonment awarded in default of payment of the fine shall, in no case, exceed one-fourth of the period of imprisonment which such Magistrate is competent to inflict as punishment for the offence otherwise than as imprisonment in default of payment of the fine.

Proviso.

this act." It was held that the section was intended to override S. 65 of the Penal Code.[1]

There was no express clause in the Code of 1882 nor is there any such clause in this Code referring to cases where the Magistrate sentences a person to fine only. But para. 1 in the Code of 1882 and sub-Ss. 1 and 2 of the present Code cover such cases too, and restrict the sentence awardable by the Magistrate to such sentence as is authorised by law.

2. Scope.—Imprisonment in default of payment of fine is a punishment not imposed on account of the offence committed but on account of the failure of the accused to pay the fine which the Court has ordered him to pay. It is, in short, a punishment for contempt of Court and the accused continues to be liable to pay the fine for 6 years notwithstanding the imprisonment.[1]

S. 33 only relates to cases in which imprisonment in default is authorised by law.[2] Ss. 63 to 70 of the Penal Code authorise the award of imprisonment in default of payment of fine in cases of offences punishable under the Penal Code. Under S. 25 of the General Clauses Act the sections have been made applicable to all fines imposed under any Act, Regulation, Rule or Bye-law unless they contain any express provision to the contrary.[3]

The mere existence of a special procedure in an Act for the recovery of fines will not negative the power to award imprisonment unless the applicability of Ss. 63—70 of the Penal Code is expressly excluded in the said Act.[4]

S. 33, Notes 2—5.

Sec. 33 does not make it imperative on a Court to award imprisonment in default of payment of fine.[5] It should, however, as a rule be awarded in cases where the Court is competent to award it, as otherwise the only procedure left open for the recovery of the fine would be that laid down in Ss. 386 and 387, Criminal Procedure Code.[6]

3. Court of any Magistrate.—The word "Magistrate" in this section is not qualified as it is in S. 35-B by the addition of the words "other than a Magistrate acting under S. 34"; hence the section applies also to Magistrates specially empowered under S. 34.[1]

4. Fine.—The excess charge and fare referred to in S. 113 of Act IX of 1890, cannot be said to be a fine, though recoverable as such. Hence imprisonment cannot be awarded in default of payment of such charge or fare.[1] Where an Act provides for the award of compensation (i.e., Cattle Trespass Act) the mere fact that compensation may be levied as a fine does not authorise the Court to order imprisonment in default of payment thereof. The ordinary mode of levying fines is prescribed in S. 386 of the Code.[2] This section does not apply to compensation ordered under S. 250 of the Code.[3] That section however itself now prescribes for the passing of an order of imprisonment simultaneously with the order for compensation. (See S. 250, Cr. P. C.) Court Fees ordered to be paid under S. 31 of the Court Fees Act though recoverable as fines are not fines within the meaning of this section.[4]

There is no distinction between the word "Penalty" in the Bombay District Municipalities Act VI of 1873 and the word "fine" in the Penal Code. So imprisonment may be awarded in default of payment of the penalty.[5]

5. Imprisonment.—Only Imprisonment can be awarded in default of payment of fine. Transportation cannot be awarded[1] nor whipping.[2] A Court cannot order that a juvenile offender be sent to the Reformatory School in default of payment of fine as under S. 8 of the Reformatory Schools Act a youth cannot be sent to a reformatory school unless a substantive sentence of imprisonment or transportation has been passed on him.[3]

Where the kind of imprisonment which the offender may be sentenced to for the offence as a substantive punishment is simple, the imprisonment that may be awarded in default of payment of fine can only be simple and not rigorous.[4] When the offence was punishable with fine only it was formerly not clear what the description of the imprisonment should be in default of payment of such fine; some cases holding in favour of simple imprisonment[5] others maintaining that there was nothing in S. 67 of the Penal Code against the imprisonment being rigorous.[6] The amendment of S. 67, Penal Code, by Act VIII of 1882 has made it clear that the imprisonment can only be simple.[7] When an offence is punishable with imprisonment of either description the imprisonment in default of payment of fine may be of either description.[8]

When rigorous imprisonment may be awarded in default of payment of fine (viz., according to S. 66, Penal Code) the Court cannot order that a portion of the term of imprisonment be spent in solitary confinement under S. 73, of the Penal Code, because that section seems to refer only to imprisonment awarded as a substantive part of the sentence and not to alternative imprisonment awarded in default of payment of fine.[9]

6. Authorised by Law.—The words "allowed by law" which were used in the Code of 1872 were construed to mean not merely allowed by law as the full substantive penalty for the offence (as held in 1 Mad. 277) but allowed by all the provisions of law taken together.[1]

These provisions are to be found in the Penal Code, Ss. 63 to 70, which by the General Clauses Act I of 1868, and now by the General Clauses Act X of 1897 are made applicable to all fines imposed under the authority of any Act unless such Act contains an express provision to the contrary.[2]

Hence it is not only necessary that the imprisonment awarded should not be in excess of the Magistrate's powers but they should also be in conformity with the provisions of the Penal Code. If the offence is punishable with fine only, S. 65, Penal Code, should be referred to for determining the limit to the imprisonment that may be awarded in default of payment of the fine.[3] But if the offence is punishable with imprisonment and fine or imprisonment or fine S. 65 and not S. 67 determines the term of imprisonment awardable.[4] Under S. 65 the term of imprisonment that may be awarded in default of payment of fine may not exceed one fourth the term of imprisonment which is the maximum fixed for the offence. Vide S. 65 of the Penal Code and the undermentioned cases.[5]

S 33, Notes 6—8.

Where the accused were sentenced under S. 58 of the Excise Act to a fine of Rs. 100 and in default to 3 months' imprisonment and in addition (they being previous offenders) were sentenced under S. 74 to 6 months' imprisonment (the maximum term awardable), it was held that the two sentences must be regarded as separate. Standing by itself the sentence of 3 months' imprisonment in default of payment of fine was a legal one and could not be affected by the fact that the additional imprisonment prescribed for the offence was limited to 6 months.[6]

Imprisonment under this section should not only be such as is authorised by law but should be passed with due regard to the requirements of the case. It should however, bear a reasonable proportion to the amount of the fine[7] but this requirement was not regarded as essential in another case, where it was observed that what the fine should be in each case must depend on circumstances which have nothing to do with the amount of fine imposed.[8]

7. Refund of fine.—A Court has no power to order the refund of fine realised. So when an accused paid a sum towards the fine inflicted, but that fact not having been communicated by the Magistrate to the jailor the prisoner suffered the whole term of imprisonment ordered in default of payment, it was held that the Magistrate had no power to order a refund but that any application for that relief should be made to the Government.[1]

8. Proviso (a): In excess of powers.—The provisos were enacted to limit the Magistrate's powers. So though S. 65 of the Penal Code authorises the awarding of imprisonment in default of fine to the extent of one fourth of the maximum term prescribed for the offence the Magistrate, will, under this section not be competent to award even this term if it is in excess of his ordinary powers.[1]

In cases of imprisonment awarded as a process for enforcement of payment of fine the rule of S. 262 of this Code limiting the period of imprisonment in summary trials does not apply, as that section only refers to substantive sentences of imprisonment.[2]

S. 33, Notes 9—10.

9. Proviso (b): Limits to imprisonment in default where substantive sentence is ordered.—Where the offence is punishable with imprisonment and fine and the Magistrate sentences the offender to both punishments and orders further that he is to undergo a term of imprisonment in default of the payment of the fine. There is in addition to the restriction found in S. 65 of the Penal Code to the term awardable, this further restriction imposed on a Magistate by S. 33 of the Code, namely that the imprisonment in default cannot exceed one-fourth of the period which the Magistrate is competent to inflict as a substantive sentence.[1] Thus a Subordinate Magistrate who is not empowered to pass a sentence of more than 6 months' imprisonment cannot award a term of more than one and-a-half months' imprisonment in default of payment of fine.[2]

Under the Code of 1872, S. 36, if a Magistrate with special powers passed a sentence of imprisonment exceeding 3 years he had to get the sanction of the Sessions Judge. Hence without sanction he had no power to pass a sentence in default of payment of fine for a period longer than 9 months.[3] The necessity for sanction having been done away with a Magistrate with special powers is now enabled to sentence a person under this section for a period of 1 year and 9 months.[4]

10. Sub-S. 2.—The Sentence of imprisonment which a Magistrate may award in default of payment of fine may be in addition to the maximum substantive sentence of imprisonment awardable by him under S. 32. So the proviso to S. 35 which limits the aggregate punishment that a Magistrate may inflict to twice the amount which he is in his ordinary jurisdiction competent to inflict does not affect his power of awarding over and above that maximum a term of imprisonment in default of payment of fine.[1]

34.* The Court of a Magistrate, specially empowered under S. 30, may pass any sentence authorized by law, except a sentence of death or of transportation for a term exceeding seven years or imprisonment for a term exceeding seven years.

Higher powers of certain District Magistrates.

34. The Court of a District Magistrate specially empowered under Section 30, may pass any sentence of imprisonment for a term not exceeding seven years, including such solitary confinement as is authorized by law, or of fine, or of whipping, or of any combination of these punishments authorized by law.

Higher powers of certain District Magistrates.

But any sentence of imprisonment for a term exceeding three years passed by any such Court shall be subject to the confirmation of the Sessions Judge.

1. Legislative Changes.—

(1) Under the Codes of 1872 and 1882 the sentences which a specially empowered Magistrate could pass did not include transportation. It was nevertheless held that this omission did not prevent such a Magistrate from acting under S. 59, Penal Code, and converting a sentence of imprisonment to one of transportation in accordance with the provisions of that section.[1] The present section leaves no room for doubt as a sentence of transportation not exceeding 7 years has been included among the sentences which a specially empowered Magistrate could pass.

(2) Under the previous Codes any sentence of imprisonment exceeding 3 years passed by a specially empowered Magistrate was subject to confirmation by the Sessions Judge.[1-a] The present section has done away with the necessity for confirmation. This renders absolute the undermentioned decisions relating to confirmation by the Sessions Court.[2]

Powers with which Deputy Commissioners and Chief Executive officers of District may be invested.

36. In the territories subject to the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, and in the territories administered by the Chief Commissioners of Oudh, the Central Provinces and British Burma, in Coorg, and in those parts of the other provinces in which there are Deputy Commissioners or Assistant Commissioners, the Local Government may invest the Deputy Commissioner, or other Chief officer charged with the executive administration of the District in criminal matters, with power to try as a Magistrate all offences not punishable with death, and to pass sentence of imprisonment for a term not exceeding seven years, including such solitary confinement as is authorized by law, or of fine, or of whipping, or any combination of these punishments authorized by law; but any sentence of upwards of three years' imprisonment passed by any such officer shall be subject to the confirmation of the Sessions Judge to whom such Deputy Commissioner is subordinate. Such Sessions Judge may either confirm, modify or annul any sentence referred for confirmation.

2. "Except a sentence. . . . . ".—Seven years is the maximum sentence which a Magistrate empowered under S. 30 is empowered to pass.[1] S. 75 of the Penal Code does not override the provisions of this section and enable a Magistrate acting hereunder to sentence a person to a longer term than 7 years.[2]

The limitation in S. 439, Cl. (3) of the Code that in enhancing a sentence the High Court shall not inflict a greater punishment than that which might have been inflicted by a Presidency Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class, does not apply to sentences passed by Magistrates acting under S. 34. It has been held nevertheless that in such cases sentences passed by the High Court under its powers of enhancement should not ordinarily exceed one of 7 years rigorous imprisonment which a Magistrate acting under S. 34 is empowered to pass. If the Court considers that 7 years will not meet the ends of justice, the usual course would be to set aside the trial and order the case to be committed to sessions.[3]

It has been held that if a case is referred under S. 349 to a Magistrate specially empowered, the latter cannot exercise his powers under S. 34[4] but can order a re-trial before himself and in that re-trial he could exercise such powers if he finds the accused guilty.[4-a]

In order that a Magistrate may pass a sentence under S. 34, he must purport to act under the powers conferred by S. 30. Where he does not purport to act under such powers a sentence in excess of his ordinary powers is illegal. Merely describing the Magistrate on the heading of his judgment as invested with such powers is not sufficient.[5]

3. Appeal.—Under the Code of 1872 appeals from all sentences of Magistrates specially empowered lay to the High Court. Under the Code of 1882 those sentences which required confirmation were to be presented before the High Court, others were maintainable before the Sessions Court itself.[1] But even under the Code of 1872 it was held that the appeal would lie to the High Court only if the Magistrate purported to act under his enhanced powers. Where there is nothing to show that he did so act, and the offence was triable by a Magistrate with ordinary powers and the sentence one which such ordinary Magistrate might have passed it was held that the appeal lay to the Court of Session.[2] The present rule, as found in S. 408 is that if a Magistrate acting under S. 34 passes sentences of transportation or of imprisonment exceeding 4 years, appeals of all or any of the accused convicted at such trial shall lie to the High Court.

If a Magistrate acting under S. 349 exercises powers under S. 34 (which S. 349 debars him from duty) the sentence is ultra vires and even if it exceeds 4 years an appeal therefrom will lie only to Sessions Court and not to High Court.[3]

1. Legislative Changes.—This section corresponds to Ss. 74 and 76 of the Code of 1872 and Ss. 446 and 449 of the Codes of 1882 and 1898. Under the 1872 Code Magistrates' jurisdiction over European British subjects permitted of their sentencing them to not more than three months' imprisonment or fine of Rs. 1,000 or both. A sentence of one year's imprisonment passed by a Magistrate on a European British subject under the Code of 1872 was therefore held to be illegal.[1] Sessions Judges were authorised to sentence such persons to a term not exceeding one year or fine or both. The Code of 1882 made no alteration in the punishment awardable by Magistrates (other than District Magistrates) and Sessions Court. But it gave District Magistrates twice the powers of ordinary Magistrates, by permitting them to award imprisonment extending to 6 months' and fine amounting to Rs. 2,000 or both.

Sentences which may be passed by Court of Session.

449. Nothwithstanding anything contained in Section 31, no Court of Session shall pass on any European British subject any sentence other than a sentence of imprisonment for a term which may extend to one year, or fine, or both.

Procedure when Sessions Judge finds his powers inadequate.

If, at any time after the commitment and before signing judgment, the presiding Judge thinks that the offence which appears to be proved cannot be adequately punished by such a sentence, he shall record his opinion to that effect and transfer the case to the High Court. Such Judge may either himself bind over, or direct the committing Magistrate to bind over, the complainant and witnesses to appear before the High Court.

(CODE OF 1872—Ss. 74, 76.)

Magistrates of the First Class, being European British subjects and Justices of the Peace, may inquire into complaints against European British subjects.

74. Any competent Magistrate may inquire into complaints of any offence made against a European British subject.

When such Magistrate may try, and extent of his jurisdiction.

If the offence complained of is a Magistrate's case, and can, in the opinion of such Magistrate, be adequately punished by him, he shall proceed as is hereinafter in this Code directed, according to the nature of the offence; and, on conviction, may pass on such European British subject any sentence warranted by law, not exceeding three months' imprisonment, or fine up to one thousand rupees, or both.

Jurisdiction of Court of Session.

76. Sessions Judges or Additional Sessions Judges, and, when specially empowered in that behalf by the Local Government, Assistant Sessions Judges who are European British subjects and who have been Assistant Sessions Judges for not less than three years, may pass on European British subjects any sentence warranted by law, not exceeding one year's imprisonment, or fine, or both.

When Sessions Judge finds his powers inadequate.

If, at any stage of the proceedings, the Sessions Judge thinks the offence cannot be adequately punished by such a sentence, he shall record his opinion to that effect and transfer the case to the High Court. The Sessions Judge may either himself bind over, or direct the committing Magistrate to bind over, the complainant and witnesses to appear before such High Court.

(1) (1882) 4 All. 141 (144), Empress v. Berrill.

S. 34-A, Note 1.

The amendment to the Code of 1898 by the introduction of S. 34-A gives Sessions Judges powers to pass sentences of death, penal servitude, imprisonment with or without fine and fine. The term of imprisonment to which Magistrates of the first class (including District Magistrates) may sentence European British subjects has been extended to 2 years, but the amount of fine leviable by them has been fixed at Rs. 1,000.

As regards the powers of Second or Third Class Magistrates over European British subjects, these powers are restricted by S. 29-A to offences punishable with fine not exceeding Rs. 50.

Under the Code of 1898 the privileges which a European British subject as such enjoyed when tried for an offence by a District Magistrate were firstly that the Magistrate's powers of punishment were much restricted and secondly that he (the accused) could claim trial by jury.[2]

S. 34-A is concerned with the former privilege. As regards other provisions relating to European British subject the law has undergone considerable modification as to which, see Ch. XXXIII.

It was provided under the old Codes that when a Sessions Judge was of opinion that he could not adequately punish a European British subject he could transfer the case to the High Court. This provision however was held inapplicable to the Court of the Resident of Aden. The Aden Court Act of 1864 requires that he should try European British subjects himself.[3]

S. 34-A was added by S. 7, Criminal Law Amendment Act XII of 1923.[4]

At the same time as this amendment was introduced the definition of High Courts given in S. 4, sub-S. 1-j was amplified so as to include the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Central Provinces for the purpose of trial of European British subjects.[5]

1. Scope of the section.—It is a general principle of Law that whenever an offence is proved against any person, a conviction must necessarily follow it, except where there are specific provisions to the contrary.[1] Every conviction again must be followed by a sentence of punishment except as expressly provided otherwise (See note 5 infra). S. 71 of the Penal Code provides such an exception, and in cases falling within that section there can be only one punishment, though there may be several convictions. In cases not falling within that section the general rule will prevail.

Where a sentence is passed on a conviction for an offence, the general principle of Law is that it should take effect immediately.[2] Where there are several sentences for different convictions against the same person, a different rule has been enacted by the Code, namely, that such sentences should run consecutively, the one, after the expiration of the other, unless the Court directs that they should run concurrently.[3] This rule is found in this section and in S. 397 infra. This section enacts the said rule in respect of cases where at one trial, a person is convicted of several offences and is sentenced to several punishments. S. 397 enacts the rule in respect of cases where a person already undergoing a sentence for a previous conviction is again sentenced to punishment.[4]

Ss. 234 and 235 infra deal with the question as to when and how far several offences can be tried at one trial.

The object and effect of this section is to regulate and in some cases, to increase, subject to the provisions of S. 71 of the Penal Code, the length of the punishment that the Courts are competent to inflict.[5]

2. "One trial".—Ss. 234 and 235 infra deal with the question as to when and how far several offences can be tried at one trial. The rules as to the assessment of punishment must be sought for in S. 71 of the Penal Code and this section.[1-a]

It is only when an accused person is convicted at one trial of two or more offences, that the provisions of this section will apply.[1] Where a person accused of several offences is separately tried and convicted for each of such offences, this section has no application and the aggregate punishment which can be awarded is not limited to twice the amount which the Magistrate is, by his ordinary jurisdiction competent to inflict; but he can, for each offence inflict the punishment which he is ordinarily competent to inflict.[2] Similarly, in the case mentioned above, an aggregate sentence of more than 14 years is not prohibited, as is provided for in the first proviso, to this section.[3]

3. Section applies only when there are convictions for two or more offences.—This section applies only when an accused person has been convicted at one trial of two or more offences.[1] Thus, where a convicted person is liable to be punished under the provisions of S. 75, Indian Penal Code, a separate sentence cannot legally be passed against him on account of the previous conviction recorded against him.[2] The reason is that S. 75 of the Indian Penal Code does not constitute an offence, but only imposes a liability to enhanced punishment.[3]

4. "Subject to the provisions of S. 71 of the Indian Penal Code."—A commits two offences, the one being the object of the other. For example, A commits criminal trespass on certain property with intent to commit theft, and also commits theft therein. The former is an offence under S. 457 of the Penal Code and the latter, under S. 380 thereof. Is S. 71 applicable to such cases and can separate sentences be passed in respect of such offences under this section? On a plain construction of S. 71[1] of the Penal Code it would Limit of punishment of offence made up of several offences.

Where anything is an offence falling within two or more separate definitions of any law in force for the time being by which offences are defined or punished, or the offender shall not be punished with a more severe punishment than the Court which tries him could award for any one of such offences.

Where several acts, of which one or more than one would by itself or themselves constitute an offence, constitute, when combined, a different offence,

(a) A gives Z fifty strokes with a stick. Here A may have committed the offence of voluntarily causing hurt to Z by the whole beating, and also by each of the blows which make up the whole beating. If A were liable to punishment for every blow, he might be imprisoned for fifty years, one for each blow. But he is liable only to one punishment for the whole beating.

seem to be clear that it does not apply to such cases. The first paragraph thereof cannot apply as it cannot be said that the theft forms part of the offence of criminal trespass with intent to commit theft. The second paragraph has obviously no application. Nor will the last paragraph apply inasmuch as theft, when combined with criminal trespass to commit theft, is not punishable under any single section of the Penal Code.[2]

There has, however, been a conflict of opinion on the question raised above due mainly to the addition and removal of certain illustrations to this section as well S. 235 and their corresponding provisions in the earlier Codes.

Up to the year 1882, S. 71 of the Penal Code did not contain the present second and third paragraphs thereof. Nor were there any provisions in the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1861, correspoding to those paragraphs. In cases of the kind under discussion, it was held by the High Court of Calcutta, under general principles of law, that the offender should be punished as guilty of a single offence, the one being regarded as evidence of the intention which is an element in the other.[3] The High Court of Bombay held, on the other hand, that the offender could be convicted and sentenced separately for each of the offences provided the aggregate amount of punishment awarded on the two charges did not exceed that which the case warranted for the graver offence.[4]

The Code of 1872 newly introduced S. 454 corresponding to a combination of the present S. 235 and the second and third paragraphs of S. 71 of the Penal Code, and contained inter alia the following paragraph and illustration:—

"3. If several acts of which one or more than one would, by itself, constitute an offence, form, when combined, an offence under the provisions of any law in force for the time being, by which offences are defined and punished, a person who does them may be charged with every offence which he may have committed, but he must not receive for such offences, collectively, a punishment more severe than that which might have been awarded, by the Court trying him for anyone of such offences, or for the offence formed by their combination.

Illustration.

To paragraph 3.

(a) A commits house-breaking by day with intent to commit adultery, and commits in the house so entered, adultery with B's wife. A may be separately. . . . . convicted of offences under Ss. 454 and 497 of the Indian Penal Code, but the Court which tries him may not inflict a severer sentence than if it had convicted him under S. 392 or 394 only."

(b) But if, while A is beating Z, Y interferes, and A intentionally strikes Y, here, as the blow given to Y is no part of the act whereby A voluntarily causes hurt to Z, A is liable to one punishment for voluntarily causing hurt to Z, and to another for the blow given to Y.]

In view of the above illustration it was held under the Code of 1872, that the case under discussion fell within the third paragraph of S. 454, but there was a difference of opinion as to whether both the offences were to be treated as one combined offence and punished with one sentence, or whether they should be treated as separate offences and punished with separate sentences subject to the rule that the aggregate sentence was not more than might have been inflicted for either offence.[5]

In the Code of 1882, the provisions of S. 454 of older Code, in so far as the joinder and trial of charges were concerned, were re-enacted in S. 235. The provisions as to punishment were taken over to the Penal Code and introduced as the second and third paragraphs of S. 71. The illustration above referred to was also omitted as an illustration to paragraph of S. 235 corresponding to the third paragraph of S. 454.

The result of the omission was that the case under discussion was held generally not to fall under S. 71 of the Penal Code as amended,[6] though there was a difference of opinion as to whether the Court would exercise a proper discretion in awarding heavy sentences for both the offences.[7]

In 1898 a new Explanation and an illustration was added to S. 35 as follows:—

Explanation.—Separable offences which comes within the provisions of S. 71 of the Indian Penal Code are not distinct offences within the meaning of this section.

Illustration.

A breaks into a house with intent to commit theft and steals property therein. A has not committed distinct offences.

This naturally seemed to show that the case under discussion fell within the clause of "separable offences" within the meaning of S. 71 of the Penal Code. It was accordingly held that separate sentences in such a case were illegal,[8] though according to the Bombay High Court the passing of such sentences would if anything be a curable irregularity.[9]

By the amending Act of 1923 the explanation and the illustration to S. 35 were omitted, but the words "subject to the provisions of S. 71 of the Indian Penal Code" were added in sub-S. (1) of the section. The omission of the illustration has again given rise to a difference of opinion as to whether the case under discussion was meant to be taken away from the category of "separable offences" under S. 71 of the Penal Code. According to the High Court of Calcutta it is.[10] According to the High Court of Patna it is not.[11] In view of the observations made in the beginning of this note the view of the High Court of Calcutta is correct.

Rioting and hurt—

A, B, C, D and E are members of an unlawful assembly and A in prosecution of the common object of the assembly commits hurt. In so far as A is concerned, he would be guilty—

(b) of causing hurt.

Now the hurt caused, may itself be a form of force used which converted the unlawful assembly into rioting, or it may be caused, in the course of rioting after the offence of rioting is complete by the use of other force. In the latter case, it is clear that the hurt is not part of the rioting within the meaning of S. 71 and separate sentences can be passed.[12] In the former case, according to the High Court of Calcutta and Lahore the hurt is part of the rioting within the meaning of S. 71 and separate sentences cannot be passed for the two offences.[13] According to the High Court of Madras, however, the hurt is not part of the rioting even in such a case inasmuch as the force necessary to constitute rioting may fall short of causing hurt, and the hurt caused by the use of force in excess of what is necessary to constitute rioting constitutes a different offence. A may therefore be punished separately for the two offences.[14] S. 35, Note 4.

As regards B, C, D and E, however, the position would be different. They are guilty

(b) by virtue of their being members of an unlawful assembly and for that reason only, of the offence of grievous hurt under S. 149 read with S. 325 of the Penal Code.

But for the rioting B, C, D and E, would not be guilty of causing grievous hurt, not having caused it themselves directly. The offence under S. 149 read with S. 325 is therefore a part of the offence of rioting and therefore separate sentences for each of the offences cannot be passed. This is the view of the Calcutta,[15] Madras[16] and Patna[17] High Courts and of the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind[18] though according to the latter Court the passing of separate sentences in such cases would only be a curable irregularity provided the aggregate of the sentences passed did not exceed the maximum punishment provided for the graver offence. A contrary view has, however, been taken by the High Courts of Allahabad,[19] Bombay,[20] Lahore,[21] and Rangoon[22] the Chief Court of Oudh,[23] and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur.[24] According to these decisions S. 149 does not create any specific offence though a person may be punishable under it. B, C, D and E are therefore not guilty of two offences, though they are punishable with two sentences. S. 71 therefore does not apply and the separate sentences are legal. It is submitted that this view is not correct in view of the decision of the Privy Council in Barendranath v. Emperor[25] that S. 149 of the Penal Code creates a specific offence.

5. "May sentence".—The word "may" in the section must be interpreted as "shall".[1] Where, therefore, an accused person is convicted at one trial of two or more offences, the Court must, in cases in which the provisions of S. 71 of the Indian Penal Code do not come into play, pass separate sentences for the several offences.[2] The Court has no discretion whatever to pass only one sentence for one offence and decline to pass sentences for the other offences of which it may find the accused guilty.[3] The reason is that just as the maximum "Ubi jus ibi remedium" (where there is a right there is a remedy) is a rule of jurisprudence, it is a principle of criminal law that where there is an offence, there must be a punishment, the general rule being affected by express provisions of law to the contrary.[4] See also the words "shall pass sentence" in Ss. 245, 258, 306 and 309, infra.

6. Separate and aggregate sentences.—In cases coming within the scope of this section, a Court has no power to pass an aggregate sentence instead of separate sentences on each head of charge. The first clause of this section clearly contemplates the passing of separate sentences of imprisonment or transportation.[1] The object of the section in imposing separate sentences is to enable the appellate or revisional Court to determine the amount of punishment to be remitted in case one or other of the charges breaks down in appeal or revision.[2] Where, however, a consolidated sentence is passed instead of separate sentences, it is only a curable error or defect.[3]

7. Consecutive sentences.—Where an accused is sentenced, at one trial, to two consecutive terms of imprisonments, the first warrant of imprisonment should be completely executed both in regard to the substantive sentence of imprisonment and the imprisonment in default of payment of fine, if any, before any effect is given to second warrant.[1]

8. "When consisting of imprisonment or transportation".—Under S. 46 of the Code of 1861, it was held that it was illegal to pass two sentences of transportation, one to begin after the expiry of the other, on the ground that such a sentence could be passed only when the penalties consisted of imprisonments.[1] In view of the introduction of the words "or transportation" after the word "imprisonment" in the subsequent Codes this view is no longer good law.

9. Imprisonment and whipping.—An accused person convicted at one trial of two or more offences may, in addition to any other punishment, be sentenced to whipping subject to the restrictions contained in the Whipping Act.[1]

Where a person convicted at one trial of two or more offences is sentenced to imprisonment and also to whipping for one of the offences, the sentence of whipping ought not to be directed to be delayed till the expiry of the sentences of imprisonment, but must be carried out in accordance with the provisions of S. 391, infra.[4] The reason is that only sentences of imprisonment or transportation can be directed to take effect in succession. See also Notes to S. 391, infra.

As to whether concurrent sentences of whipping can be passed, see Note 12, infra. S. 35, Notes 9—10.

10. Concurrent sentences.—Prior to the Code of 1898 it was held in the undermentioned cases,[1] that where an accused was sentenced to two or more terms of imprisonment or transportation on conviction at one trial it was illegal to direct the sentences to run concurrently. By the addition of the words "unless the Court directs that such punishments shall run concurrently" at the end of sub-S. (1) of this section in 1898, the abovementioned rulings have been rendered obsolete. Even under this section prior to the amending Act of 1923, concurrent sentences could be passed only when the accused was convicted of two or more offences at one trial (see Note 2, ante) and the Court had, therefore, no power to order sentences to run concurrently with sentences passed in other trials.[2] In such cases S. 397, infra, provided that the sentences should commence the one after the expiry of the other. Section 397, infra, has now been amended in 1923 so as to empower the Court to pass concurrent sentences even in cases where an accused has been convicted in two or more separate trials.

Where a Magistrate convicted an accused person of offences under Ss. 148 and 326 of the Penal Code and sentenced him to 18 months imprisonment "under 326|148, Penal Code", it was held that it must be interpreted as meaning that the Magistrate passed concurrent sentences under each section and not as separate sentences of 9 months on each charge.[3]

11. Imprisonment or transportation—Concurrent sentences of.—The word 'or' between the words "imprisonment" and "transportation" in sub-S. (1) does not restrict the applicability of the section to cases where the several punishments are all of the same kind, i.e., are all sentences of imprisonment or all sentences of transportation: the section applies also to cases where one of the sentences inflicted is imprisonment and the other is transportation.[1] Therefore, a term of imprisonment can legally be made to run concurrently with a term of transportation.[2]

12. Whipping—Concurrent sentences of.—Concurrent sentences can be passed only when the sentences are imprisonment or transportation. It is, therefore, illegal for a Court to pass concurrent sentences of whipping.[1] The literal meaning of concurrent sentences of whipping would be that the prisoner is to be flogged by two operators simultaneously, which is a monstrous result.[2]

13. Imprisonment in default of payment of fine, if can be made concurrent.—This section which empowers a Court to pass concurrent sentences of imprisonment, does not refer to sentences of imprisonment in default of payment of fine, but refers only to substantive sentences of imprisonment.[1] Thus, it is illegal to pass concurrent sentences of imprisonment in default of payment of fines imposed upon convictions for two or more offences at one trial.[2]

14. No imprisonment for a period longer than 14 years—Proviso (a).—Proviso (a) to this section places a limit upon the period to which the aggregate of sentences of imprisonment awarded under sub-S. (1) may extend. Thus an aggregate sentence of 20 years passed in respect of 3 convictions at one trial is contrary to this proviso.[1] It has been already mentioned in Note 2, ante, that this section applies only to convictions for several offences at one trial. Therefore, if the accused is tried and convicted separately in two or more cases, the aggregate of the several sentences may be accumulated beyond the period of 14 years.[2]

Where an accused is convicted at one trial of two or more offences and sentences of transportation are passed upon him under S. 59, Penal Code, in lieu of the terms of imprisonment awarded; the aggregate of the sentences of transportation is also subject to the maximum limit of 14 years.[3]

15. Proviso (b).—See Note 2, ante.

16. Aggregate of sentences when treated as a single sentence.—Sub-S. 3 of this section provides that, for the purposes of appeal, the aggregate of consecutive sentences passed under this section shall be deemed to be a single sentence.[1] The aggregate of such sentences can be deemed to be a single sentence only for the purposes of appeal.[2] Thus, two or more consecutive sentences of imprisonment, each less than 7 years, cannot be added up and treated as a single sentence for the purpose of commuting them into transportation under S. 59 of the Penal Code.[3] The aggregate of consecutive sentences referred to in sub-S. (3) refers only to sentences of imprisonment and not to sentences of fine.[4]

Even before the amendment of sub-S. (3) of this section by the Amending Act of 1923, introducing the word "consecutive" the general trend of opinion was that the phrase "aggregate sentence" related only to cases of consecutive sentences and not to cases of concurrent sentences.[5] The amendment of 1923 referred to above gives legislative recognition to the above view.[6]

(7) Power to attach and sell property in cases judicially before him (Ss. 172 and 354).
(8) Power to endorse a search-warrant and order delivery of thing found (Ss. 372, 373 and 376).
(9) Power to sell perishable property of a suspicious character (S. 415).

Powers of Magistrates of the Second Class.

24. Magistrates of the Second Class shall, as such, in addition to the powers mentioned in section twenty-two, have the following power:—

(1) Power to order the Police to investigate an offence in which the Magistrate has jurisdiction to try or to commit for trial (S. 110).

Powers of Magistrates of the First Class.

26. Magistrates of the First Class shall, as such, in addition to the powers mentioned in sections twenty-two and twenty-four, have the following powers:—

(1) Power to commit for trial (S. 143).
(2) Power to issue search-warrant otherwise than in the course of an inquiry (S. 377).
(3) Power to demand security to keep the peace (S. 491).
(4) Power to demand security for good behaviour (Ss. 504 and 505).
(5) Power to make orders etc., in possession cases (S. 530).
(6) Power to make orders of maintenance (S. 536).

Powers of Magistrates of Divisions of Districts.

28. Magistrates who, under the provisions of section forty, are Magistrates of Divisions of Districts shall, as such, have all the powers given to Magistrates of the First Class, and referred to in section twenty-six, and, in addition, shall have the following powers:—

(1) Power to make over cases to a Subordinate Magistrate (S. 44).
(2) Power to pass sentence on proceedings recorded by a Subordinate Magistrate (S. 46).
(3) Power to withdraw cases, but not appeals, and to try or refer them for trial (S. 47).
(4) Power to hold inquests (S. 135).
(5) Power to entertain complaints of offences, and receive Police reports (S. 141).
(6) Power to entertain cases without complaint (S. 142).

1. Scope of the section.—Section 28, ante, read with column 8, Sch. II of the Code, defines the powers vested in each class of Magistrates to try particular offences. This section read with Sch. III defines certain incidental powers vested in the Magistrates of each class, which they are required to exercise either in the course of trial before them or otherwise. These powers are referred to as the ordinary powers of a Magistrate as opposed to additional powers which may be conferred on them under S. 37, infra.[1] Thus the power to issue a search warrant under S. 96 is one of the ordinary powers of any Magistrate.[2]

But the power to entertain complaints is not one of the ordinary powers of a First, Second or Third Class Magistrate, but must be conferred as an additional power under S. 37.[3]

Schedule III is, however, not exhaustive of the powers conferred on Magistrates under the Code. Thus a power to demand security for keeping the peace under S. 106 is not mentioned in Sch. III as one of the powers of a First Class Magistrate, but is expressly given by S. 106. A First Class Magistrate therefore can exercise the powers under that section notwithstanding it is not specified in Sch. III.[4] But a power to act under a particular section referred to in Sch. III can only mean a power to act subject to the conditions of that section. Thus a power to act under S. 107 is conferred by Sch. III on a First Class Magistrate, but a District Magistrate cannot detain the accused under sub-

(10) Power to issue order prohibiting repetition of nuisance (S. 519).

SYNOPSIS.

S. 37, Note 1. SCOPE OF THE SECTION 1

1. Scope of the section.—This section deals with the conferment of additional powers on Magistrates.[1] Certain additional powers can be conferred by the Local Government only and certain others by the District Magistrate. These are set forth in Sch. IV, infra. Thus a District Magistrate cannot authorise a Second Class Magistrate to commit a case for trial under S. 206[2] but

(3) Power to entertain without complaint cases which he has jurisdiction to try or to commit for trial (S. 142).
(4) Power to commit for trial (S. 143).
(5) Power to issue order to prevent obstruction, etc., (S. 518).
(6) Power to issue order prohibiting repetition of nuisance (S. 519).

(b) By the Magistrate of the District—
(1) Power to hold inquests (S. 135).
(2) Power to entertain complaints and receive Police reports in cases in which he has jurisdiction to try or to commit for trial (S. 141).
(3) Power to issue order to prevent obstruction, etc., (S. 518).
(4) Power to issue order prohibiting repetition of nuisance (S. 519).

Powers which may be conferred on Magistrates of the first class.

27. In addition to the powers given and referred to in section twenty-six, a Magistrate of the first class may be invested with the following powers:—

(a) By the Local Government—
(1) Power to make over cases taken up on complaint, etc., to a Subordinate Magistrate (S. 44).
(2) Power to hold inquests (S. 135).
(3) Power to entertain complaints of offences, and receive Police reports (S. 141).
(4) Power to entertain cases without complaint (S. 142).
(5) Power to issue process for person within jurisdiction who has committed an offence outside Magistrate's local jurisdiction (S. 157).
(6) Power to try summarily (S. 222).
(7) Power to hear appeals from convictions by Magistrates of the second and third classes (S. 266).
(8) Power to sell suspicious or stolen property (S. 417).
(9) Power to issue order to prevent obstruction, etc. (S. 518).
(10) Power to issue order prohibiting repetition of nuisance (S. 519).
(11) Power to make orders, etc., in local nuisance cases (S. 521).

(1) Power to hold inquests (S. 135).
(2) Power to entertain complaints of offences, and receive Police reports (S. 141).
(3) Power to issue order to prevent obstruction, etc., (S. 518).
(4) Power to issue order prohibiting repetition of nuisance (S. 519).

Powers which Local Government may confer on Magistrates of Divisions of Districts.

29. In addition to the powers given and referred to in section twenty-eight, the Local Government may confer on a Magistrate of a Division of a District, exercising the powers of a Magistrate of the first class, the following powers:—

(1) Power to try summarily. (S. 222).
(2) Power to hear appeals from convictions by Magistrates of the second and third classes (S. 266).

1. Conferment of powers, generally or specially.—The words "generally" and "specially" are used in this section in contrast with each other. Where, by notification of the Government, a class of officials is invested with powers to try certain offences such officials are generally empowered.[1] But where a notification empowers the Magistrates mentioned in the list attached to the notification to try certain cases, such Magistrates are specially empowered.[2]

See also the undermentioned case.[3]

2. Order conferring powers, when takes effect Sub-S. (2).—There was no provision in the Code of 1872 corresponding to sub-S. (2) of this section and it was doubted whether communication of the investiture of power was necessary before the power can be exercised.[1] Sub-S. (2) was accordingly added in the Code of 1882, to remove this doubt.

Where before the sentence is passed in a case, the Magistrate trying the case is invested with higher powers, he can pass sentence in the exercise of such higher powers.[2] But the forum of appeal will depend not necessarily on the sentence but on the question whether the investiture of higher powers was during the trial and before the sentence, or after the trial, and before sentence. See S. 407, infra.

The maxim "Omnis ratihabitio retro-trahitur et mandato priori aequiparatur"—a subsequent notification or confirmation has a retrospective effect and is equivalent to a prior command-does not apply to criminal cases.[3] So a power conferred under this section has no retrospective effect.[3-a] Thus where a Third Class Magistrate passed a sentence, which only Second Class Magistrate can

Changes made in the Code of 1882—

(1) The words "local area" was substituted for the word "District" whenever the word occurred in S. 56 of the Code of 1872.

(2) The words "under the same Local Government" were newly inserted.

(3) The words "or has otherwise directed" were newly inserted.

Changes made in the Code of 1898—

The section remained the same in the Code of 1898.

Changes made in 1923—

(1) The word "appointed" has been substituted for the word "transferred" wherever it occurred in the section.

(2) The words "continue to" were omitted.

2. Scope of the section.—This section provides that whenever any person invested with any powers under the Code in any local area is appointed to an equal or higher office of the same nature in a like local area under the same Local Government, the powers so invested, continue in him.[1] But he can exercise such powers only in the local area in which he is so appointed. The reason is that under S. 12, ante, Magistrates can exercise jurisdiction only within the local areas defined for them, or where there is no such definition, throughout the District. In Bisheshar Nath v. Empress,[2] Plowden, J., observed as follows:—

> "Under S. 12 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882, the appointment of Magistrates.....rests with the Local Government, which, may appoint such persons as it thinks fit to be Magistrates of the first, second or third class in any District. The local area of the jurisdiction of a Magistrate so appointed may extend to the whole District, but does not, by force of that section, extend beyond it. A Magistrate appointed under S. 12 may, however, be competent to exercise magisterial functions in a District, other than that in which he is a Magistrate, by appointment under S. 12, without being appointed to be a Magistrate in that District. This is brought about by S. 40 operating upon officers of Government, who, being invested with magisterial powers under the Code are transferred from one District to an office in another District. In this case, such officer is competent to exercise magisterial functions in the latter District, not by appointment to be Magistrate in that District, but by virtue of his holding some office in that District. When, therefore, the question is, whether a particular person is competent to exercise the powers of a Magistrate of any class described in S. 12 at a particular moment of time in a particular District, the answer cannot be in the affirmative unless either first he has been appointed by the Local Government under S. 12 to be a Magistrate in such District, and such appointment is still in force, or secondly he holds in that District, at the time when he assumes to act as Magistrate some office in the service of Government on which S. 40 can operate."

3. "Unless the Local Government otherwise directs".—Where A who was invested with powers by the Local Government to exercise summary jurisdiction in District X under S. 222 of the Code of 1872 (now S. 260), proceeded to England on furlough and on his return, was posted to District Y and was invested by a fresh notification with the powers of a Magistrate of the first class, it was held that the fresh investment of powers was a "direction otherwise" within the meaning of this section and that A could not exercise summary powers in District Y.[1]

4. Is appointed to an equal or higher office of the same nature.—This section applies only when a person invested with any powers under the Code is appointed to an equal or higher office of the same nature within a like local area under the same Government.[1-a] But this does not mean that a person invested with powers does not retain his powers if he is appointed to a lesser office in the same local area. Thus, where A was invested by name with second class magisterial powers when he was officiating as Mamlatdar of Pandarpur and was reverted subsequently to his permanent post of Head Karkun in the same local area it was held S. 40 did not apply but that A retained his powers.[1]

5. Absence on leave, effect of.—Where a First Class Magistrate invested with appellate powers, was transferred from Shikarpur to Sholapur and next as District Magistrate of Ahmedabad, and during the course of this service there were various intervals of leave, it was held that he continued to exercise the powers conferred on him, and that it made no difference that he proceeded on various terms of leave during the interval.[1] But where there is an implied withdrawal of powers as where, an officer invested with powers under the Code is appointed permanently to other duties or elsewhere dissociated from magisterial work, or when he resigns the office, a subsequent appointment to the same or higher office requires a fresh investment of powers and S. 40 will not apply.[2]

Sub-S. 2 is new.

2. Withdrawal of powers.—The Local Government and the District Magistrate may, under this section, withdraw any or all of the powers conferred under this Code on any person by it or by him but until they are so withdrawn, they will continue. A Government order wrongly interpreting a previous investiture order will not operate as a withdrawal.[1]

A withdrawal may also be implied from the fact that the Magistrate upon whom powers are conferred, is permanently allotted to another duty not entailing Magisterial powers or from the fact that he resigns, or retires from his appointment.[2]

An order withdrawing powers under this section operates only from the date of its communication to the Magistrate concerned and, until this is done the powers continue.[3]

1. Legislative Changes.—

Changes introduced in 1898—

(1) The words "or preventing the escape of" in clause (a) are new.

(2) The words "or suppression" have been introduced in Cl. (b) and Cl. (c) of the Old section has, in consequence, been deleted.

2. Scope of the Section.—This section requires that, in the cases specified, every person shall assist a Magistrate or a police officer reasonably demanding his aid.[1] It does not intend that police officers and Magistrates should have a general power of calling upon members of the public to join them in doing the work for which they are paid, such as tracing out the whereabouts of an absconding criminal or collecting evidence to warrant his conviction.[2] When a Magistrate in a case of theft ordered a person to find a clue within 15 days, it was held that the order was illegal.[3] Similarly where a Sub-Inspector of Police demanded the accused to give assistance in finding and arresting a number of unknown persons whose precise whereabouts were unknown and the accused refused to give such assistance it was held that they incurred no criminal liability by reason of such refusal.[4]

3. "Is bound to assist."—The assistance that can be demanded under the section is personal assistance of the individual of whom it is demanded.[1] It will include also such material assistance as the placing at the dispoal of the police officer, the use of a fire-arm or of a bicycle or other means of locomotion

4. Person assisting, not a public servant himself.—A person assisting a Magistrate or a police officer under this section is not a "public servant" within the meaning of S. 21 of the Penal Code.[1]

5. "In the taking or preventing the escape of any other person."—The word "taking" means the same thing as the word "arresting." Where a person on being arrested, lay down on the ground and refused to move it was held that the object in so lying down must have been only to secure his eventual escape and that the police officer effecting the arrest was entitled, under this section to demand the assistance of persons in preventing such escape.[1]

6. Illegal arrest.—The fact that assistance is taken under this section will not render the arrest or custody lawful if it is otherwise illegal.[1]

7. Disobedience of order under the section.—The disobedience of a valid order under this section demanding assistance is punishable under S. 187 of the Penal Code.[1] But the disobedience of an order not authorised by the section, as when an order is made against a person that he should find a clue in a case of theft within 15 days, is not an offence and is not punishable under that section.[2]

obligation under this section to give information of the offences not specified in the section, though there may be an obligation under some other section to do so.[2] The section does not exclude the criminal himself from the obligation thereunder, and he can be prosecuted for not giving such information.[3]

3. "Shall in the absence of reasonable cause....forthwith give information."—When once information of the fact of a crime has reached the police the object of this section gets fulfilled and it is not reasonable that every other person who may possibly be bound to give information should be prosecuted for not having done so.[1] [See also Note to S. 45, infra.] Where there were several lambardars aware of the commission of an offence and one of them to the knowledge of the others directed the village chowkidar to make a report at the Thana it was held that there was no intentional omission on the part of the others to give the information or at any rate that there was a reasonable excuse for not giving it.[2]

4. "Information" meaning of.—The word "information" means something which the person bound to report knows or has reason to believe to be true and not any hearsay or any vague surmises which the people around him might have put into his head.[1] As to the meaning of the words "give information" under S. 182 and S. 203 of the Penal Code see the undermentioned cases.[2] Where a person who could speak to an offence only from hearsay, gave a report based on such hearsay it was held that the report could not be used as evidence to corroborate his evidence, both the report and the evidence being based on hearsay.[3]

It is not necessary that the information should be signed by the informant.[4]

5. Failure to give information—Effect of.—An intentional omission to give the information under this section is an offence punishable under S. 176 or under S. 202 of the Penal Code.[1] The giving of a false information of the commission of an offence, is also punishable under S. 182 or S. 211 of the Penal Code, as the case may be.[2]

S. 44, Note 5.

A person who is aware of the intention of certain persons to commit an offence and does not disclose it to anybody is practically a consenting party to the crime and an accomplice thereto and his evidence is worthless and no reliance should be placed upon it.[3]

The mere omission to give information of an offence does not amount to "intentionally aiding" the offender in his offence within the meaning of S. 107 of the Penal Code.[4] or property respecting which the District Magistrate, by general or special order made with the previous sanction of the Local Government, has directed him to communicate information.

(2) In this section—

(i) "village" includes village-lands; and

(ii) the expression "proclaimed offender" includes any person proclaimed as an offender by any Court or authority established or continued by the Governor-General in Council in any part of India, in respect of any act which, if committed in British India, would be punishable under any of the following sections of the Indian Penal Code, namely, 302, 304 382, 392, 393, 394, 395, 396, 397, 398, 399, 402, 435, 436, 449, 450, 457, 458, 459 and 460.

Appointment of village headman by District Magistrate or Sub-divisional Magistrate in certain cases for purposes of this section.

(3) Subject to rules in this behalf to be made by the Local Government, the District Magistrate or Sub-divisional Magistrate may from time to time appoint one or more persons, with his or their consent, to perform the duties of a village-headman under this section, whether a village-headman has or has not been appointed for that village under any other law.

90. Every village-headman, village-watchman, owner or occupier of land, or the agent of any such owner or occupier, and every Native officer employed in the collection of revenue or rent of land on the part of Government or the Court of Wards, is bound forthwith to communicate to the nearest Magistrate, or to the officer in charge of the nearest police station, any information which he may obtain respecting:—

Land-holders and others bound to report certain matters.

(a) the residence of any notorious receiver or vendor of stolen property at the village of which he is headman or watchman, or in which he owns or occupies land, or collects rent or revenue, as the case may be;

(b) the resort to any place within the limits of such village of any person or persons known or reasonably suspected of being a thug or robber;

(c) the commission or intention to commit suttee or other non-bailable offence at or near such village;

(d) the occurrence of any sudden or unnatural death.

Section 7, Cl. (2) of the Burma Village Act, VI of 1907 while making provisions similar to this section, expressly excludes the operation of this section in areas in which it is in force. See the undermentioned cases.[3]

2. Legislative changes.—The following amendments have been introduced in the section, by Act XVIII of 1923:—

(i) the words "in charge of the management of that land" have been newly added. See Note 6.
(ii) The word "obtain" has been substituted by the word "possess" See Note 9.
(iii) In Cl. (d) the words "or the discovery.....respect of such person" are new. See Note 15.
(iv) Some more sections of the Indian Penal Code have been added in Cl. (e), viz., Ss. 231 to 238 and 489-A to 489-D.

(i) the words "or sub-divisional Magistrate" have been newly added.
(ii) The words "to be village-headman for the purposes of this section in any village for which there is no such headman appointed under any other law" have been substituted by the words "with his.....under any other law".

3. Scope and object of the section.—This section differs from S. 44, ante in the following respects—

(1) Section 44 applies to every person who is aware of the commission or of the intention to commit any of the offences specified, while this section is limited in its application to certain specified persons only.[1]

S. 45, Notes 3—5.

(2) The information should, under S. 44, be given to the nearest Magistrate or police-officer while, under this section, it should be given to the nearest Magistrate or to the officer in charge of the Police-Station.

(3) The matters in respect of which information should be given under this section are somewhat different from and more numerous than, the matters referred to in S. 44.

"The object of the law" said Prinsep, J., in Matuki Misser v. Queen Empress[2] "is clearly that the earliest information should be communicated by those who are in the best position to obtain the same, or who, from their connection with the land, are in some authority, and should accordingly be made responsible for this duty, in order that an inquest may be held."

4. "Every village-headman, etc.".—In the Code of 1872 a village accountant was not specified in the section as one of the persons bound to give information.[1] He is expressly mentioned in the present Code. A village Magistrate in Madras is a village headman within the meaning of the section.[2] So also a Mukkadam[3] and Kotwar[3-a] in the Central Provinces. A village Chowkidar is a village-watchman under this section.[4] As to Zaildar in the Punjab see the undermentioned cases.[5]

The village-headman is part of the machinery of Criminal administration and definite duties have been imposed on him with regard to information given or complaint made to him.[6]

5. "Owner or occupier of land."—This section speaks of the owner or occupier of land but not of a house. The reason why the legislature has limited the liability to the owner of land seems to be that where there are houses it is expected that the place will be populous and the police will somehow get the information. In cases of land in the mofussil there are not always a sufficient number of police men available in the locality and it is necessary that the owner or occupier of land should be made liable to give the information. The owner of a house is not bound, under the section to give the information.[1]

Illustrations.

(1) X commits suicide by falling into the well situated in the compound of a house. The owner or occupier of the house and compound is not obliged to give information under this section.[2]

(2) X, a member of Nayar Tarwad family dies suddenly in the family house. The Karnavan of the Tarwad is not bound to furnish information under this section.[3]

S. 45, Notes 6--9.

6. "Agent of any such owner or occupier in charge of the management of that land."—Under the section as it stood before the amendment of 1923 the "agent of any such owner or occupier" was bound to give information in respect of the matters referred to therein. It was, however, considered that, unless qualified, the word "agent" would include all kinds of agents and servants, that the imposing of the liability under the section on all such persons would make the section very wide and troublesome, and that it should be restricted only to persons in charge of the management of the land.[1] The words "in charge of the management of the land" were accordingly added after the word "agent" by the amending Act, XVIII of 1923.

A Khazanchi of a Zamindar of a village[2] or a Mukhtear[3] or a mere servant of the owner or occupier[4] is not an agent within the meaning of the section. A dewan may be an agent if his master is absent. But if he was acting only under the orders of his resident master he will not be liable under the Act.[5] It was held in the undermentioned case arising under the Code of 1872 that the liability of the resident agent arose when the owner was not resident and had no personal knowledge of the fact and that when he had such knowledge the liability attached to him.[6]

7. "Every officer employed in the collection of revenue."—A village-accountant is not a person engaged in the collection of revenue.[1] Under the present section, he is, however, liable as a village-accountant to furnish the information regarding the matters specified.

8. "Shall forthwith communicate."—The word "shall" indicates that the provisions of the section are imperative. It is therefore incumbent on the persons mentioned in the section to give the information specified.[1] The word "forthwith" has been held to mean within a reasonable time "having regard to the object of the provisions and the circumstances of the case".[2] See Note 3 above for the object of the section.

9. "Any information which he may possess."—The section as it stood before the amendment seemed to suggest that there was an obligation on the part of the persons mentioned therein to obtain information.[1-a] This difficulty has now been overcome by the substitution of the word "possess" which requires the informant to give such information as he may possess to his own knowledge and is fit to be communicated to the officer-in-charge of the police station.[1]

Where a person gives information of a decoity in the village to the village headman, which is reduced to writing, it is enough if the latter merely communicates the information. He need not transmit the statement along with it.[2]

10. "Information"—Meaning of.—"Information" does not mean a person's belief or opinion.[1] Nor is a mere rumour of an occurrence in a village "information" within the meaning of this section.[2] Thus where a Zamindar and his agent were told by people in the village, whose names they did not remember, that a certain person had disappeared from the village and had been murdered, it was held that this was not "information" which either the Zamindar or his agent was bound to communicate under this section.[3]

11. "Possess"—Meaning of.—See Note 9.

12. Residence of receiver of stolen property, etc.—Clause (a).—For the definition of "stolen property", see S. 410, Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) and also the undermentioned case.[1]

13. Passage of thug, etc., through village—Clause (b).—This clause requires information to be given as to the visit to a village, of persons suspected to be dacoits,[1-a] robbers, etc.

For the definition of the word "thug", see S. 310 of the Penal Code.

Sub-S. 2 (ii) of this section provides that the expression "proclaimed offender" includes the classes of persons referred to therein. The use of the word "includes" shows that the persons included in the expression are persons over and above those to whom the words, in their ordinary signification, applies, and who might, but for this explanation escape out of the category of "proclaimed offenders".[1]

Where a man is prosecuted for failure to report the movements of the proclaimed offender the burden is on the prosecution to prove that there was a due proclamation in accordance with the provisions of S. 87 of the Code; no presumption of due proclamation under that section can be drawn from the mere fact of attachment under S. 88 of the Code.[2]

Where a person suspected of a robbery is arrested and brought to a village and then released there it cannot be said that a suspected robber has "resorted to or passed through" the village.[3]

14. Commission of non-bailable offence—Cl. (c).—There is no duty upon the persons referred to in the section, to communicate information of bailable offences other than those specified in Cl. (c).[1] Nor are they bound to communicate information under the section if the offence is not committed in or near their village.[2]

15. Sudden or unnatural death—Cl. (d).—The obligation to report about any sudden, suspicious or unnatural death arises only when it takes place in or near the village and not in a remote part of the country.[1] The words 'sudden or unnatural death' in the ordinary sense mean that there is a suspicion that the death has not occurred from natural causes.[2] Thus death by suicide is an unnatural death.[3] But however unnatural, in the ordinary sense, the cause of a death might be, it would not come within the meaning of the word "unnatural" in S. 45 unless the death occurred soon after the cause. If for instance, a person who has had a fall from a tree lingered for several weeks and then died, solely from the effects of the fall, it cannot be regarded as a case of sudden or unnatural death within the meaning of the section.[4]

Before the amendment of 1923, the section contained no words as to the obligation to report about the discovery of any corpse in or near such village under suspicious circumstances. It was, however, held in several cases[5] that the discovery of the corpse under suspicious circumstances would give rise to a presumption that the death was not natural, and that, therefore, there was an obligation to communicate information as to the occurrence. The amendment of Cl. (d) by the Act XVIII of 1923 now gives effect to this view.

Under the Bombay Village Police Act, VIII of 1867, the police-patel has to hold an inquest over the dead body, investigate into the cause of death, and submit a written report and when necessary send the body for post mortem examination.[6]

16. Appointment of village-headman for purposes of this section—Sub-S. (3).—See for example the rules made under The Bengal Village Chaukidari Act VI of 1870, for the appointment of headmen of villages.

17. Order under Sub-S. (3) if revisable by High Court.—An order passed by a District Magistrate dismissing a village-headman from his office, by virtue of the rules framed by the Local Government under Sub-S. 3 is an executive and not a judicial order and is not open to revision by the High Court.[1]

18. Punishment for non-compliance with the section.—A failure to comply with the provisions of this section may be punishable under S. 202

or S. 176 or S. 154 of the Penal Code according to the nature of the information omitted to be given. Thus a failure to furnish the information referred to in Cl. (a) or Cl. (b) or Cl. (d) of the section will be punishable under S. 176 of the Penal Code.[1-a] A failure to furnish the information referred to in Cl. (c) will be punishable under S. 202 or S. 176 of the said Code.[1-b] In the case of an owner or occupier of land, he can be prosecuted for an offence under S. 154 when he[1] or his agent or manager[2] fails to report of the occurrence of a riot or unlawful assembly on the land. The fact that the person bound to give the information under this section is himself the injured party will not exempt him from criminal liability if he fails to give the information.[2-a] The burden of proving that the accused holds a position which raises the obligation under this section is on the prosecution.[3] Where a person is prosecuted for failure to give information of an offence, the prosecution has also to prove that the specified offence was committed, that the accused had knowledge of it, and that he intentionally failed to give information.[4] This section ought not to be used for purposes of vexation but in order to secure due information to Magistrates and the Police of offences committed within their jurisdiction.[4-a] If that information is conveyed to the nearest Magistrate or the Police officer by one of the persons bound to give such information it will not be reasonable that every other person who may possibly be bound to give the information be prosecuted for not having done so.[5] Thus where A and B were both bound to give information under this section and B gave the information in the presence of A the latter should not be prosecuted for not having given the information over again.[6] But where the accused had no reason to suppose that information had been given to the authorities by any one else, he cannot escape liability merely because another person who was also bound to give information under the section was present at the occurrence.[7]

19. Effect of giving false information.—The giving of false information under this section as to an offence may be made the basis of a

1. Legislative Changes.—

Changes introduced in 1872—

No changes were introduced in 1872. Ss. 177 and 178 merely were repetitions of Ss. 91 and 92 of the Code of 1861.

Changes introduced in 1882—

The provisions of Ss. 177 and 178 were embodied in a single section namely S. 46 with this difference that the words "or attempts to evade arrest" and a paragraph corresponding to the present sub-S. 3 were new.

Changes introduced in 1898—

There is no difference between S. 46 of the Code of 1882 and the present section except that the three paragraphs have been separately numbered as sub-sections in the present section.

(CODE OF 1872—Ss. 177 and 178.)

177. In making an arrest, the police officer or other person executing the warrant shall actually touch or confine the body of the person to be arrested, unless there be a submission to the custody by word or action.

Warrant how executed.

178. If a person against whom a warrant of arrest is issued forcibly resists the endeavour to arrest him, the police officer or other person executing the warrant may use all means necessary to effect the arrest.

91. In making an arrest, the police officer or other person executing the warrant, shall actually touch or confine the body of the person to be arrested, unless there be a submission to the custody by word or action.

Warrant how to be executed.

92. If a person against whom a warrant of arrest is issued, shall forcibly resist the endeavour to arrest him, it shall be lawful for the police officer or other person executing the warrant, to use all such means as may be necessary to effect the arrest.

Resisting an endeavour to arrest.

2. Scope of the section.—An arrest under the Code can be made in certain cases only under a warrant of arrest, and in certain cases without any warrant. (S. 54, infra.) This section applies generally to all arrests under the Code whether under a warrant or otherwise.

Under the English common law an arrest of a person consists, except in the case of submission, of the actual seizure or the touching of the body of a person with a view to his detention.[1] There is no difference between Civil and Criminal cases in this respect[2]. This section, in substance, is a reproduction of that rule. There must be touch, or confinement or else acquiescence. An arrest by mere oral declaration is not legal.[3]

3. Submission to custody.—Where a person states that he has done certain acts which amount to an offence, he accuses himself of committing the offence: and if he makes the statement to a police officer, as such, he submits to the custody of the officer within the meaning of S. 46 of the Code.[1] A submission to the custody of a police officer within the meaning of this section is "custody" within the meaning of S. 27 of the Evidence Act.[2]

4. Arrest on Sunday.—An arrest on a Sunday is not illegal.[1]

5. "All means necessary to effect arrest".—The general principle of the law is that in making an arrest no more force is to be used than is necessary.[1] It is sufficient if the arresting officer touches the body of the person to be arrested and even this is unnecessary when the latter submits to the arresting officer's custody by word or action. It is by no means necessary that the arresting officer should, in arresting the person, immediately proceed to put hand-cuffs on him with cord or chain; such articles are used as a means of restraint and their use can only be justified on the ground that they are means necessary to effect the arrest.[2]

On the other hand the person effecting the arrest is justified under sub-S. 2 of the section in using so much violence as is necessary to effect his object[2-a] with this qualification, namely that his right does not, in cases coming under sub-S. 3, extend to causing the death of the person sought to be arrested. Thus where a Chowkidar seeking to arrest a fugitive thief, seeing no other means of capturing him, wounded him with a spear, it was held that he was justified in doing so.[3] Similarly a shot fired over the head of a suspect, a dangerous person, in order to effect his arrest, was held to be justified.[4] But where A seeing B cutting corn in his (A's) land, gave him chase and the latter while being so pursued ran his head (the night being dark) against a tree and fell, and thereupon A hit him with a stick and fractured his skull, it was held that he exceeded his right of using violence in arresting him.[5]

6. Illegal arrest—Effect of.—The fact that the officer who effected the arrest was beyond his powers in making the arrest does not affect the jurisdiction of the Court to try the accused for the offence with which he is charged.[1] Nor does it affect the question whether the accused was or was not guilty of the offence for which he was charged.[2] But the person wrongfully making the arrest would be guilty of the offence of wrongful confinement punishable under S. 342 of the Penal Code, unless he is, or by a mistake of fact, in good faith, believes himself to be, bound by law to do it.[3]

A resistance to an illegal arrest is no offence and S. 99 of the Penal Code will not apply.[4] Similarly a rescue from custody under an illegal arrest is not an offence.[5] But though a rescue from arrest where the warrant is not illegal but merely defective will be an offence.[6]

Where for the purpose of effecting an arrest of a person for an offence not punishable with death or transportation for life, the Police Officer fired two shots at the person who thereupon turned round and wounded the inspector, it was held that the act of the accused was done in self-defence.[7]

7. Resistance to lawful arrest.—A resistance or illegal obstruction to a lawful arrest may amount to an offence punishable under S. 224 of the Penal Code.[1] But the mere act of running away before arrest or the evasion of arrest does not constitute the offence of resistance or illegal obstruction to lawful apprehension.[2] There is no legal right of private defence against an arrest carried out in the manner provided by this section.[3]

47. If any person acting under a warrant of arrest, or any police officer having authority to arrest, has reason to believe that the person to be arrested has entered into, or is within, any place, the person residing in, or being in charge of, such place shall on demand of such person acting as aforesaid or such police officer, allow him free ingress thereto, and afford all reasonable facilities for a search therein.

Search of place entered by person sought to be arrested.

99. If there is reason to believe that any person liable to arrest under this Chapter without a warrant, of whom a police officer is in search, has entered into or is within any house or place, it shall be the duty of the person residing in or in charge of such house or place, on the demand of such police officer, to allow ingress thereto, and all reasonable facilities for a search therein.

Ingress to be allowed into house entered by person of whom police in search.

179. If there is reason to believe that any person against whom a warrant has been issued has entered into, or is within, any house or place it shall be the duty of any person residing in or in charge of such house or place, on demand of the police officer or other person executing a warrant, to allow such police officer or other person free ingress thereto, and to afford all reasonable facilities for a search therein.

93. If there is reason to believe that any person, against whom a warrant has been issued, has entered into, or is within any house or place, it shall be the duty of any person residing in or in charge of such house or place, on demand of the police officer or other person executing the warrant, to allow such police officer or other person free ingress thereto, and to afford all reasonable facilities for a search therein.

Search of house entered into by person against whom warrant has been issued.

106. If there is reason to believe that any person liable to arrest under this Chapter without a warrant, of whom a police officer is in search, has entered into or is within any house or place, it shall be the duty of the person residing in or in charge of such house or place, on the demand of such police officer, to allow ingress thereto, and all reasonable facilities for a search therein.

Person in charge of house entered into by another of whom police officer is in search to allow ingress, etc.

S. 47, Note 1.

1. Scope of the Section.—This section only compels persons in charge of any place to afford to the police, facilities for the search of persons to be arrested, who are or have entered into such place. It does not restrict the powers of the police to enter the place to be searched without any demand as mentioned in the section.[1]

S. 48.

48*. If ingress to such place cannot be obtained under section 47, it shall be lawful, in any case for a person acting under a warrant and in any case in which a warrant may issue, but cannot be obtained without affording the person to be arrested an opportunity of escape, for a police officer to enter such place and search therein, and, in order to effect an entrance into such place, to break open any outer or inner door or window of any house or place, whether that of the person to be arrested or of any other person, if after notification of his authority and purpose, and demand of admittance duly made, he cannot otherwise obtain admittance:

Provided that, if any such place is an apartment in the actual occupancy of a woman (not being the person to be arrested) who, according to custom, does not appear in public, such person or police officer shall, before entering such apartment, give notice to such woman that she is at liberty to withdraw, and shall afford her every reasonable facility for withdrawing, and may then break open the apartment and enter it.

48. If ingress to such place cannot be obtained under S. 47, it shall be lawful in any case for a person acting under a warrant, and in any case in which a warrant may issue, but cannot be obtained without affording the person to be arrested an opportunity of escape, for a police officer to enter such place and search therein, and in order to effect an entrance into such place, to break open any outer or inner door or window of any house or place, whether that of the person to be arrested or of any other person, if, after notification of his authority and purpose and demand of admittance duly made, he cannot otherwise obtain admittance.

Provided that, if any such place is an apartment in the actual occupancy of a woman (not being the person to be arrested) who, according to custom, does not appear in public, such person or police officer shall, pefore entering such apartment, give notice to such woman that she is at liberty to withdraw, and shall afford her every reasonable facility for withdrawing, and may then break open the apartment and enter it.

100. If ingress to such house or place cannot be obtained under S. 99, the police officer authorized to make the arrest shall take such precautions as may be necessary to prevent the escape of the person to be arrested, and send immediate information to any Magistrate having jurisdiction.

Procedure where ingress not obtainable.

officer shall, before entering such apartment, give notice to such woman that she is at liberty to withdraw, and shall afford her every reasonable facility for withdrawing, and may then break open the apartment and enter it. S. 48.

If a warrant cannot be obtained without affording such person an opportunity of escape, and there is no person authorised to enter without a warrant on the spot, the police officer may make an entry into such house or place and search therein.

180. The police officer or other person authorized by warrant to arrest a person, may break open any outer or inner door or window of any house or place, whether that of the person accused or of any other person, in order to execute such warrant, if, after notification of his authority and purpose and demand of admittance duly made, he cannot otherwise obtain admittance.

Breaking of door or window.

181. If information be received that a person accused of any offence for which a warrant may issue is concealed in an apartment in the actual occupancy of a woman who, according to the customs of the country, does not appear in public, the police officer or other person employed to execute the warrant shall take such precautions as may be necessary to prevent the escape of the accused person.

If the accused person does not deliver himself up, the police officer or other person authorized to execute the warrant may notify his authority and purpose and demand admittance.

If after such notification and demand he cannot otherwise obtain admittance, he shall give notice to any woman as aforesaid in such apartment, not being a person against whom a warrant has been issued, that she is at liberty to withdraw, and shall afford her every reasonable facility for withdrawing, and may then break open the apartment and execute the warrant.

94. The police officer or other person authorized by warrant to arrest a person, may break open any outer or inner door or window of any house or place, whether that of the person accused, or of any other person, in order to execute such warrant, if, after notification of his authority and purpose, and demand of admittance duly made, he cannot otherwise obtain admittance.

Breaking of outer door or window.

95. If information be received that a person accused of any offence, for which a warrant may issue, is concealed in a zenana or apartment in the actual occupancy of a woman who, according to the customs of the country, does not appear in public, the police officer or other person employed to execute the warrant, shall take such precautions as may be necessary to prevent the escape of the accused person, and if the accused person shall not deliver himself up, the police officer or other person authorized to execute the warrant may, if after notification of his authority and purpose, and demand of admittance duly made, he cannot otherwise obtain admittance, break open such zenana or apartment, and execute the process entrusted to him; first giving notice to any woman as aforesaid in such zenana or apartment, not being a person against whom a warrant has been issued, that she is at liberty to withdraw, and affording her every reasonable facility for withdrawing.

Breaking open a zenana or female apartment.

107. If ingress to such house or place cannot be obtained under the last preceding section, the police officer authorized to make the arrest shall take such precautions as may be necessary to prevent the escape of the person to be arrested and send immediate information to a Magistrate. If no warrant can be obtained

Procedure if ingress be not obtained.

SYNOPSIS.

	Note No.
LEGISLATIVE CHANGES	1
SEARCH OF ARRESTED PERSONS	2
RESISTANCE TO SEARCH	3
DISPOSAL OF THINGS FOUND ON THE PERSON SEARCHED.	5

1. Legislative Changes.—There was no section corresponding to this in the Code of 1861. S. 387 of the Code of 1872 contained the words "or is arrested without warrant and is not admitted to bail" for the second paragraph of the present section. It was the duty of the arresting officer under that section to search the person arrested. Under the present section the police officer may search such person.

2. Search of arrested persons.—Ss. 51 to 53 deal with search of arrested persons, Ss. 102 and 103 inter alia deal with search of a person in other cases. This section provides that in the cases (a) to (f) in the following table, the officer arresting a person, or to whom the arrested person is made over, may search such person:—

It is not necessary that the purpose of the search under Ss. 51 to 53 should always be to look for something definite, such as an incriminating article. The searching officer may and should take notice of anything worthy of attention, such as marks of injury, and, if called as a witness, he may depose to such marks. But it is not permissible to forcibly take hold of a prisoner and examine his body medically without his consent for the purpose of qualifying some medical witness to give medical evidence in the case against the accused. Any such examination without the consent of the prisoner amounts to an assault and the police are not entitled to do this without authority. Medical evidence obtained under such circumstances is, it has been held, not admissible.[1] When the prisoner consents to be examined, the evidence of the medical officer who examined him is, of course, admissible.[2] S 51. Notes 2—5.

It is submitted that the view that the evidence of the medical witness is inadmissible, does not seem to be a sound one. In 11 Cri. L. Jour. 453,[3] Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C.J., observed "For without in any way countenancing disregard of the provisions prescribed by the Code, I hold that what would otherwise be relevant does not become irrelevant because it was discovered in the course of a search in which those provisions were disregarded."

3. Resistance to search.—A resistance to a search under this section may amount to an offence under S. 186 of the Penal Code.[1]

4. Manner of search.—There is no provision in the Code which requires a panch to be called in cases of searches of persons.[1] Under S. 12 of the Police Act, 1861, however, Rules have been framed by the Local Governments requiring the search to be made wherever possible in the presence of witnesses, see for example the Allahabad Police Regulations, para. 141.

CHAPTER IX.

Of Arrest without Warrant.

When police may arrest without warrant.

92. A Police officer may, without orders from a Magistrate and without a warrant, arrest:—

Firstly.—Any person who, in the sight of such police officer, committs a cognizable offence.

Secondly.—Any person against whom a reasonable complaint has been made, or a reasonable suspicion exists, of his having been concerned in any such offence.

Thirdly.—Any person against whom a hue and cry has been raised of his having been concerned in any such offence.

Fourthly.—Any person who has been proclaimed, either under this Act, or in a District or Police Gazette or Notification.

Fifthly.—Any person found with property in his possession which may reasonably be suspected to be stolen property.

Sixthly.—Any person who obstructs a police officer while in the execution of his duty, or who escapes from lawful custody, and

CHAPTER VI.

Of Arrest without Warrant.

Police officer may arrest without warrant in certain cases.

100. A police officer in the cases hereinafter mentioned may, without orders from a Magistrate and without a warrant, arrest,—

Firstly.—Any person who in the sight of such police officer shall commit an offence specified in Column 3 of the Schedule annexed to this Act, as an offence for which police officers may arrest without a warrant.

Secondly.—Any person against whom a reasonable complaint has been made or a reasonable suspicion exists of his having been concerned in any such offence.

Fifthly.—Any person who is found with stolen property in his possession.

Sixthly.—Any person who shall obstruct a police officer while in the execution of his duty.

1. Legislative Changes.—

Difference between the Codes of 1861 and 1872.

Clauses 5 and 7 of the Code of 1872 corresponding to clauses 4 and 6 of the present section, were absent in the Code of 1861.

Difference between the Codes of 1872 and 1882.

The words "and who may reasonably be suspected of having committed an offence with reference to such thing" in clause 4 of the Code of 1882 were newly inserted.

Difference between the Codes of 1882 and 1898.

(1) The words "or of belonging . . . service" in clause 6 is new.

(2) Clauses 7 and 8 are new.

(3) The words "and Bombay" which occurred in the last paragraph of the old section have now been deleted from sub-S. 2.

S. 54, Notes 1--3.

Amendment of 1923.

Clause 9 has been newly added.

2. Scope of the section.—This section gives the police wide powers of arresting persons without warrant. It is however not a matter of caprice, limited only by the police officers' own view as to what persons they may arrest without warrant. Their powers are strictly defined by the Code, and being an encroachment on the liberty of the subject, an arrest purporting to be under the section would be illegal unless the circumstances specified in the various clauses of the section exist.[1] Where a police constable purported to act under a warrant which was found to be invalid and there was nothing to show that he proceeded under this section it was held that the arrest could not be supported under this section.[2]

This section refers to cases where a person is arrested not only without a warrant but also without an order from a Magistrate. Hence, where a person is arrested in pursuance of the order of a Magistrate, it is such order that must determine the legality or otherwise of the arrest.[3]

A police officer's power to arrest under this section is discretionary and notwithstanding the existence of the conditions specified in the section, it may be desirable in the circumstances of a particular case to simply make a report to the Magistrate instead of arresting the suspected person.[4]

3. "Any police officer".—It is only a police officer that can act under this section. A private person cannot act under this section even though authorised by a police officer to do so, inasmuch as the Code confers no powers on a police officer to send persons who are not police officers to make an arrest which he himself could lawfully make.[1]

The word "Police" is defined in the Indian Police Act, 1861, and also in the various Local Police Acts as including all persons enrolled under those Acts as such. A village Chowkidar is not a police officer.[2] Nor are the authorities of a Native State, police officers within the meaning of the Indian Police Act. They cannot therefore make an arrest in British Territory.[3] See also the following cases as to who is and who is not a police officer.[4] As to the

4. "Concerned in any cognizable offence"—Clause 1.—A police officer can act under clause 1 only when the offence for which a person is to be arrested is a cognizable offence.[1] Such person, must, as a fact, have been concerned in such offence or there must have been a reasonable complaint made or credible information[1-a] received or a reasonable suspicion felt that he has been so concerned. An offence under S. 61 of the Bombay Village Police Act (VIII of 1867) is not a cognizable offence and the police have no power to arrest without warrant for such offence.[2] Again, if the person arrested is a child under 7 years of age, who cannot under S. 82 of the Penal Code commit an offence, the arrest is illegal.[3]

5. Reasonable complaint.—It is not necessary that the complaint should have been made to the police officer himself who makes the arrest; it is sufficient if there is a reasonable complaint made to any person entitled to entertain it. Where a Magistrate acts upon a complaint of a cognizable offence, there is a "reasonable complaint" of the accused being concerned in a cognizable offence within the meaning of this section.[1] Where, however, a complaint is made to a police officer of the commission of a cognizable offence, but there are circumstances in the case which lead him to suspect the information, he should refrain from arresting persons of respectable position and leave the complainant to go to Magistrate and convince him that the information justifies the serious step of the issue of warrants of arrest.[2] As to the meaning of the word "reasonable", see note 7 infra.

6. "Credible information".—There was no provision in the Codes of 1861 and 1872, enabling an arrest without warrant on credible information as to the person to be arrested being concerned in a cognizable offence. Such a provision was introduced for the first time in S. 54 of the Code of 1882.[1]

The words "credible information" include any information which, in the judgment of the officer to whom it is given, appears entitled to credit in the particular instance. It need not be sworn information.[2] The words "credible" and "reasonable" have reference to the mind of the person receiving the information. A bare assertion without anything more cannot form the material for the exercise of an independent judgment and will not therefore amount to

"credible information".[3] The "reasonable suspicion" and "credible information" must relate to definite averments which must be considered by the police officer himself before he arrests a person under this section.[3-a]

A complaint of a cognizable offence recorded by a Magistrate and sent by him to the police for investigation and report is sufficient information justifying action under this section.[4] Similarly an information that a warrant of arrest has been issued against a person in respect of a cognizable offence, may justify action being taken under this section.[5] Where, from a report of a bisuedar that certain persons were dacoits the police sergeant called them to surrender but the latter resisted and fired shots at the sergeant, it was held that the latter was justified in arresting those persons.[6] But where a vague information was received that if the police went to a certain place along the Railway line they would see some people there who were probably about to rob a train, and the police went to the place and finding certain persons there arrested them, it was held that there was no authority for assuming that because a party or persons were in a certain place at a certain time they were about to engage in a criminal act, and that therefore there was no legal justification for the arrest.[7]

7. "Reasonable suspicion exists of his having been so concerned."—A police officer can arrest a person without warrant where a reasonable suspicion exists of his having been concerned in any cognizable offence.[1] Where a police officer suspecting that certain pieces of cloth which a man was carrying early morning, was stolen property, went to him and questioned him and having received unsatisfactory answers, arrested him, it was held that he was entitled to do so.[2] Where a person was found armed lurking at midnight in a village inhabited by persons well known to the police as professional dacoits it was held that there was a reasonable suspicion against the person of his being concerned in a cognizable offence.[3] But this does not mean that the police are limited only by their own discretion as to what persons they may arrest without warrant. Their powers in this respect are as has been seen in Note 2 ante strictly defined by the Code. In order to act under the first clause, there must be a reasonable complaint or reasonable suspicion of the person to be arrested having been concerned in a cognizable offence. What is a 'reasonable' complaint or suspicion must depend upon the circumstances of each particular case; but it should be at least founded on some definite fact tending to throw suspicion on the person arrested, and not on a mere vague surmise.[4]

8. Possession of stolen property—Clause 4.—Under the Code of 1861 any person found with stolen property in his possession could be arrested without warrant.[1] It was held that the clause referred to property found to have been stolen and not to anything suspected to have been stolen.[2] Under the present clause, however, a reasonable suspicion as to its being stolen property is sufficient.

9. Obstruction to police officer—Clause 5.—It is a right and duty of a police officer to prevent a breach of the peace and he may arrest any one who obstructs and resists him in performing this duty.[1]

10. Deserter from Army or Navy—Clause 6.—A police officer has power to arrest without warrant a deserter from His Majesty's Army and an obstruction thereto would be punishable under S. 225-B of the Penal Code.[1]

11. Arrest of fugitive criminals for offences committed outside British India—Clause 7.—There was no provision corresponding to this clause in the Code of 1882 and it was held under that Code that a police officer could not arrest without warrant a British subject in British India on a charge of a cognizable offence committed outside British India.[1] The present clause now authorises the police in British India, where the offence is one of those enumerated in the First Schedule of the Extradition Act (XV of 1903), to arrest without warrant fugitive criminals from outside British India.[2] To satisfy the requirements of this clause two conditions must be present: First, that the person to be arrested has been concerned or a reasonable complaint has been made or credible information has been received, or reasonable suspicion exists of his having been concerned, in any act committed outside British India which if committed within British India would be punishable as an offence, and secondly, that the person is liable for such act to be apprehended or detained in custody in British India under any law relating to extradition or under the Fugitive Offenders Act or otherwise. The wording of the clause clearly indicates that the arresting police officer has to exercise his own judgment and form his own opinion as to whether he should or should not act, and to enable him to do so he must have the necessary facts before him. As to what is reasonable suspicion, see Note 7 above.[3]

There must be in existence as a fact, as opposed to any belief which may be entertained by any person, a warrant which has been issued under the Extradition Act. It is not necessary that it should be present or available to any particular officer. It must merely exist.[4]

1. Legislative Changes.—There is no difference between S. 101 of the Code of 1861 and S. 94 of the Code of 1872.

Difference between the Codes of 1872 and 1882.

(1) The words "any person found lurking within the limits of such station" were substituted by a clause corresponding to clause (a) of this section.

(2) The words "or any person who is a reputed robber, house-breaker, thief, receiver of stolen property knowing it to be stolen, or who is of notoriously bad livelihood" were substituted by a clause corresponding to clause (c) of this section.

There is no difference between the corresponding sections of the two Codes except that the present sub-S. 2 is new.

2. Scope of the Section.—This section deals with matters which are not offences but in which an officer in charge of a police station may arrest without warrant. Thus the fact that a person is a habitual offender is by itself not an offence, but he may be arrested under this section and dealt with under the security sections.[1] This section is, however, independent of Chapter VIII of the Code (Security sections) although proceedings under Chapter VIII may follow such arrest as a natural sequence.[2]

It is only a person falling within any of the three clauses (a), (b) or (c) of the section that can be arrested under this section. A person, for example, who is suspected of earning his livelihood by unlawful gaming, is not one of such persons and cannot be arrested under this section.[3] The powers with which officers in charge of police stations have been armed under the Code for the purpose of restraining bad characters are exceptional powers and should never be put in force without the greatest deliberation. This section is intended for suppression of habitual bad characters whom an officer in charge of a police station suddenly finds within his circle, or about whom he has good cause to fear that they will commit serious harm before there is time to apply to the nearest Magistrate empowered to deal with the case under S. 112.[4]

S. 55, Notes 3—9.

3. "In like manner".—The words "in like manner" refers to S. 54 which a Police officer has power to arrest without an order from a Magistrate and without a warrant.[1]

4. Who can make an arrest under this section.—It is only an officer in charge of a police station that can make an arrest under this section. If he wishes to depute any other police officer to do it, he should proceed under S. 56, infra.

5. Habitual robbers etc.,—Clause (c).—This clause refers to reputed habitual offenders. An arrest on mere suspicion that a person is concerned in several offences is not justified.[1] Where a person was acquitted on a charge of dacoity, but was immediately arrested by the police purporting to be under this section but without anything to show that he was a habitual offender, and was kept in custody for 12 days, it was held that the procedure was altogether illegal and entirely without jurisdiction.[2]

6. Arrest of persons outside the limits of the police-station.—An arrest of a person under this section means the arrest of a person voluntarily within the limits of a police station. It is illegal for an officer in charge of a police station to arrest under S. 55 out of the limits of his station.[1]

7. Procedure on arrest.—See S. 61 infra. When the police act under this section they are bound to give the person arrested the option of bail, and that bail should be, as the Code requires, not excessive but in accordance with the position in life occupied by the person arrested.[1]

8. Sub-S. 2.—The Code does not apply to the Police of Calcutta unless expressly made applicable to them (See S. 1). This section is one of those that are made expressly applicable to the police of Calcutta and therefore an arrest by an Inspector of Police in Calcutta of a person who has no ostensible means of subsistence or is unable to give a satisfactory account of himself, is quite legal.[1]

9. Escape from lawful custody.—It was held in the undermentioned cases[1] that an obstruction to, or escape from, lawful custody under an arrest under this section is not punishable under Ss. 224 or 225 of the Penal Code inasmuch as the person arrested is not charged with any offence. The Penal Code was however, subsequently amended by the introduction of a new section viz., 225-B and now, an escape from any lawful custody is punishable under that section.

1. Legislative Changes.—

(1) There was no material difference between S. 140 of the Code of 1861 and S. 102 of the Code of 1872. The latter section was re-enacted without any alteration in the Code of 1882.

(2) Sub S. (2) of the present section is new.

(3) The words "or any police officer making an investigation under Chap. XIV and the words "the officer so required shall . . . . show him the order" have been added by the amending Act of 1923.

2. Scope of the section.—The fact that an order in writing is given under this section to a police constable to make an arrest, does not deprive him of his statutory powers of arrest conferred on him independently of this section. Thus a constable to whom an order is given in writing under this section may arrest an offender under S. 54, ante and such arrest will not be bad by reason of the provisions of this section not being followed.[1] The fact that a Magistrate has issued a warrant for the arrest of a person under S. 114, infra, is no bar to an order for his arrest under this section.[2]

3. "Any officer subordinate to him".—As a general rule, the Code confers no power on a police officer to send persons other than police officers to make an arrest which he himself can lawfully make.[1] This section is however an exception to this general rule.

The expression "officer subordinate" is not limited to a police officer as in S. 54 and Ss. 57 to 61 of the Code. An arrest by a Chowkidar in pursuance of an order from an officer in charge of a police-station is therefore legal.[2]

4. "Order in writing".—The mere endorsement of a constable's name on a warrant of arrest issued by a Magistrate, and signed by the officer in charge of a police-station is not "an order in writing" within the meaning of this section.[1] The endorsement of the name of the constable actually going to make the arrest is not necessary for the validity of an order under this section.[2]

5. "Other cause".—The words "other cause" refer to the causes specified in S. 55, ante, for which a person may be arrested without warrant. It has been held by the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind that the order for arrest given to a subordinate officer should specify within which category as given in S. 55 the supposed offender falls.[1] But the Allahabad High Court has held that the mere specification of S. 55, will be enough.[2]

6. Notifying substance of order to person arrested.—Under the section as it stood before the year 1923, it was held in the undermentioned cases[1] that S. 80 of the Code did not apply to arrests made under this section and that the substance of the order for arrest need not be notified to the person to be arrested nor the order shown to him. The introduction of the words "the officer so required shall, before making the arrest, notify to the person, etc.," by the Amending Act of 1923 has now negatived this view.[2] The person ordered to arrest, is not bound on his own initiative to show to the person to be arrested, the order given to him. He should do so only if so required by the person to be arrested.[3]

SCOPE OF SECTION	1
DUTY OF THE POLICE	3

1. Scope of section.—In the case of noncognisable offences, the power of the police to arrest without warrant arises only under the conditions specified in this section, i.e., when the offender refuses to give his name and address or gives a name and address which the police officer has reason to believe is false.[1]

2. Release on bail of person arrested.—Where the true name and residence of the person arrested is ascertained he must be released on bail if he executes the necessary bond.[1]

3. Duty of the Police.—Where a police constable found a person causing disturbance on a public road and demanded his name and address, which was not given, whereupon he used abusive language to the person and arrested him, it was held that the arrest was justified but that the use of abusive language amounted to an offence under S. 504, of the Penal Code.[1]

Person charged refusing to give his name and residence.

93. Any person known to have committed, or suspected of having committed, an offence for which a police officer is not authorized to arrest without a warrant, and who refuses on demand of a police officer to give his name and residence, or gives a name or residence which there is reason to believe to be false, may be detained by such police officer for the purpose of ascertaining the name or residence of such person; and shall, within twenty-four hours, be forwarded to the Magistrate having jurisdiction, unless before that time his true name and residence are ascertained, in which case such person shall be forthwith released.

Person charged with an offence refusing to give his name and residence.

108. Any person who is known or suspected to have committed an offence for which a police officer is not authorized to arrest without a warrant, and who shall refuse on demand of a police officer to give his name and residence, or shall give a name or residence which there is reason to believe to be false, may be detained by such police officer for the purpose of ascertaining the name or residence of such person and with a view to future proceedings.

1. Pursuit of persons outside British India.—This section authorises the pursuit of an offender into any place in British India.[1] It does not authorise the pursuit into foreign territory for purposes or arrest. Where an offender, in respect of an offence committed in British India was arrested on territory belonging to the Nizam's dominions it was held by the Privy Council that the arrest was illegal and without jurisdiction.[2] Similarly it has been held by the High Court of Lahore that the arrest of a person in Gwalior State for an offence committed in British India is illegal.[3] But where full and exclusive power and jurisdiction of every kind over Railway lines and over all persons within those lines had been ceded by the Patiala State to the British Government and the accused, a subject of the Patiala State was arrested in a Railway carriage within those limits, it was held that the arrest was lawful.[4]

Pursuit of offenders into other jurisdictions.

103. For the purpose of arresting any person accused of a cognizable offence, a police officer may pursue any such person into the limits of the local jurisdiction of another police officer, whether subordinate to the same Magistrate as himself, or to the Magistrate of any other District, and whether such place be in the same Province or not.

Police may pursue offenders into other jurisdictions.

141. It shall be lawful for a police officer to pursue, with a view to arrest, any person accused of any of the offences specified in Column 3 of the Schedule annexed to this Act, as offences for which police officers may arrest without a warrant, into the limits of another police officer, whether subordinate to the same Magistrate as himself, or to the Magistrate of any other District, and whether such place be under the same Local Government or not.

Police may pursue offenders into other jurisdictions.

SCOPE OF THE SECTION	2
"IN HIS VIEW"	3
HOW TO MAKE AN ARREST UNDER THIS SECTION ..	6
"TAKE SUCH PERSON OR CAUSE HIM TO BE TAKEN IN CUSTODY"	7
ESCAPE FROM CUSTODY	9

1. Legislative Changes.—

(1) There was no provision corresponding to this in the Code of 1861.

(2) The difference between Ss. 105 and 107 of the Code of 1872 and S. 59 of the Code of 1882 was merely verbal.

(3) There was no material difference between the corresponding section of 1882 and this section as it stood before the amendment of 1923.

(4) The words "cause him to be taken in custody" in sub-S. (1) were newly added by the amending Act of 1923.

2. Scope of the section.—Sections 54 to 58, ante deal with the powers of a police officer to arrest without warrant. The powers of a private individual to arrest are necessarily much more limited and are dealt with by this section.[1] A private individual may arrest a person only[1-a] when

(1) he is a proclaimed offender or

(2) he, in his view, commits a non-bailable and cognizable offence.[2]

After the arrest is effected the arrestor, should, without unnecessary delay make over the arrested person to a police-officer or, if such officer is absent, take or send such person in custody to the nearest police station.

How to proceed with person arrested.

107. A private person making an arrest under this chapter shall forthwith make over the person arrested to a police officer; and, in the absence of a police officer, shall take such person to the nearest police station. The police shall deal with such person according to the provisions of Ss. 92 or 93, as the case may be, and shall not arrest or detain him unless he appears to be liable to arrest or detention under the section applicable.

(2) See Note 3, infra.

[See also (1924) 1924 All. 645 (652) Kishen Lal v. Emperor.]

S. 59, Notes 2—5.

As to whether a private person in India can arrest a person who threatens to commit an offence, as can be done under the Common Law of England, see the undermentioned case.[3]

3. "In his view".—As has been seen in S. 54, ante a police officer may arrest a person without warrant if there is reasonable suspicion of his having been concerned in a cognizable offence. But a private person cannot arrest on mere suspicion of information.[1] The offence must be committed in his view. The words "in his view" mean "in presence of" or "within sight of" and not "in his opinion".[2] An arrest made by a private person where the offender has not committed any offence in the sight of the arrestor is not a lawful arrest.[3] Thus where A whose bullock had been stolen in his absence traced it to the house of B and then and there arrested him it was held that B not having committed any offence in the view of A, the arrest was illegal.[4] Similarly where, on hearing a cry from J that R had committed a cognizable offence, X, a private individual came up and arrested R, it was held that the arrest was not lawful.[5] On the other hand where A was beating C with a cane and thereupon D an onlooker arrested A it was held that the arrest was justified.[6]

The words "in his view" should not be given too strained a construction. Where A went to his cocoanut tope and, seeing a man standing on the ground with a pot of toddy in his hands and two of his confederates climbing the trees, arrested the man on the spot, it was held that the latter should be deemed to be committing theft "in the view" of his arrestor. The toddy should be regarded as being in the process of being removed from the tope.[7]

4. Private person.—A Chowkidar is not a police-officer but is only a "private person" and cannot arrest any person on mere suspicion.[1] The private person making an arrest under this section and the person with whom the arrested person is sent in custody to the police station are not "public servants" within the meaning of S. 21 of the Penal Code.[2]

5. "May arrest".—The words "may arrest" do not necessarily mean that the private person in whose presence a non-bailable and cognizable offence is committed should himself physically arrest the offender. He may cause such offender to be arrested by another person.[1]

6. How to make an arrest under this section.—The arrest under this section must be carried out in the manner provided by S. 46, ante which is a general provision applying to all arrests under the Code.[1] The arresting person can use all necessary means to effect the arrest, including the wounding of the person arrested for the purpose of effecting the arrest.[2] But there is no right to cause the death of the person sought to be arrested unless he was committing an offence punishable with death or with transportation for life.[3]

7. "Take such person or cause him to be taken in custody".—The section as it stood before the Amendment thereof in 1923 contained only the words "take such person". It was, however, held that the words would also enable the arrested person being sent in custody to the police station and that it was not necessary that the person arresting should himself take the arrested person to the station.[1] The words "or cause to be taken in custody" were added by the amending Act of 1923 thereby giving effect to the said decisions.

A private person arresting another person under this section is bound to take him without unnecessary delay to a police-officer or in his absence to the nearest police-station. Where therefore, instead of doing so, he keeps the person arrested unnecessarily in his own custody without making any effort to hand him over to the police, he will be guilty of an offence under S. 342 of the Penal Code.[2]

8. "Police-Officer".—See S. 54, ante.

A Chowkidar is not a police officer and is not entitled to receive a person arrested under this section.[1] A Chowkidar under the Chota Nagpur Rural Police Act 1914 (B.O. Act I of 1914) is however a police-officer and can receive a person arrested under this section and detain him in custody.[2]

9. Escape from custody.—Where the arrest purported to be effected under this section is not lawful, as where the offence is not committed in the presence of the arresting person an escape or rescue from the custody is no offence.[1] Where the arrest is however lawful, an escape will be punishable under S. 224 of the Penal Code.[2] A rescue from lawful custody would be punishable under S. 225 of the Penal Code.[3]

Detention without arrest. See Note 1, Pt. 2. Report to the Magistrate. See Note 2, Pt. 2.

1. Scope and object of the section.—A person arrested without warrant should be taken or sent without unnecessary delay before a Magistrate having jurisdiction in the case or before the officer in charge of a police-station. Section 61 provides that the person arrested should not be detained in police custody for more than 24 hours in the absence of a special order of a Magistrate under S. 167. The precautions laid down in these sections seem to be designed to secure that within not more than 24 hours some Magistrate shall have seisin of what is going on and some knowledge of the nature of the charges against the accused, however incomplete the information may be.[1]

60. A police-officer making an arrest without warrant shall, without unnecessary delay and subject to the provisions herein contained as to bail, take or send the person arrested before a Magistrate having jurisdiction in the case, or before the officer in charge of a police-station.

Person arrested to be taken before Magistrate or officer in charge of police-station.

101. A police-officer making an arrest under this chapter shall, without unnecessary delay, take or send the person arrested before the Magistrate having jurisdiction in the case, or before the officer in charge of a police-station.

Party arrested to be taken immediately before the proper authority.

109. A police-officer having made an arrest under this Chapter, shall take or send the person arrested without unnecessary delay before the Magistrate who has jurisdiction in the case, or before the officer in charge of a police-station.

A police-officer cannot detain any person in custody without arresting him. Any such detention will amount to a wrongful confinement within S. 340 of the Penal Code.[1-a] The practice of keeping, to all intents and purposes, a person in custody, but not producing him before a Magistrate under the colourable pretension that no actual arrest has been made, is a defiance of all provisions of law for the protection of the liberty of the subject and should not be tolerated.[2] Compare S. 81, infra as to arrests under a warrant.

2. Failure to take or send arrested person before Magistrate or officer in charge of a police station.—It is the duty of a police-officer making an arrest without warrant to take or send the arrested person without unnecessary delay before a Magistrate or before an officer in charge of a police-station. A violation of this duty will be an offence punishable under S. 29 of the Police Act 1861.[1]

Where a police-officer arrested a person without a warrant for a cognizable offence and being unable to take or send him to the Magistrate sent a report on which the Magistrate issued a warrant, it was held that the accused was legally brought before the Magistrate.[2]

3. Suffering escape from custody.—Where a police-officer negligently suffers a person in his custody to escape he will be guilty of an offence under S. 223 of the Penal Code.[1]

61.* No police-officer shall detain in custody a person arrested without warrant for a longer period than under all the circumstances of the case is reasonable, and such period shall not, in the absence of a special order of a Magistrate under section 167, exceed twenty-four hours exclusive of the time necessary for the journey from the place of arrest to the Magistrate's Court.

1. Scope of section.—This section enacts that a person arrested without a warrant cannot be detained by the Police-officer arresting him

(1) for a longer period than under all the circumstances, is reasonable;

(2) in any case for a longer period than 24 hours except under a special order of a Magistrate under S. 167.

A police-officer is not justified in detaining a person for one single hour except upon some reasonable ground justified by the circumstances of the case[1] and under no circumstances can the period of such detention exceed 24 hours without a special order of a Magistrate under S. 167. At the expiration of 24 hours, unless the special order has been obtained the prisoner must, either be discharged, or sent on to the Magistrate. Any longer detention is absolutely unlawful.[2] The section is imperative and where a police officer is charged with

Accused not to be detained by police more than 24 hours without special authority.

124. No police-officer shall detain an accused person in custody for a longer period than, under all the circumstances of the case, is reasonable; and such period shall not, in the absence of the special order of a Magistrate, whether having jurisdiction to inquire into or try the case or not, exceed 24 hours, exclusive of the time necessary for the journey from the place of arrest to the Magistrate's Court.

Accused not to be detained by the Police beyond 24 hours without special authority.

152. No police-officer shall, without the special order of a Magistrate, detain an accused person in custody for longer period than, under all the circumstances of the case, is reasonable: such period in no case to exceed 24 hours. If the enquiry has not been completed within 24 hours, the officer in charge of the police-station shall, nevertheless, forward the accused to the Magistrate with a short despatch stating the offence for which the accused has been arrested, if there are grounds for believing that the accusation is well founded.

having detained prisoners for more than 24 hours it is not necessary for the Crown to prove that he detained them with a guilty knowledge.[3] The section has, however no application where there has not been a continuous detention of 24 hours.[4] The law views with disfavour detention of any person in the custody of the Police.[4-a] The provisions of this section and of S. 167, infra are designed to prevent discoveries by means of duress and terror of wrongful confinement;[5] and to see that an accused person is brought before a Magistrate competent to try or commit with as little delay as possible.[6]

This section does not apply to the Police of Calcutta (see S. 1 ante). But this does not mean that there is power in the Calcutta Police to detain any person for an unlimited period, even if such police-officer is a Justice of the Peace.[7] The detention can only be until it is possible for them to produce him before a Magistrate subject to all just exceptions.[8]

2. "Detain in custody"—meaning of.—The detaining of a person in a particular place or the compelling of him to go in a particular direction by force of an exterior will overpowering or suppressing in any way his own voluntary action, is an imprisonment on the part of him who exercises that exterior will.[1] As to the meaning of the word "custody" as used in S. 27 of the Evidence Act see the undermentioned cases.[2] A detention through the exercise of moral force without the accompaniment of physical force or actual conflict, is sufficient to amount to confinement.[3]

3. Special order of Magistrate under S. 167.—See S. 167 ante.

4. Place of detention during the 24 hours.—There is no express provision in the Code as to the place of confinement during the period of detention by the Police-officer. But this will not enable a subordinate officer to confine the arrested person in any place which he might select. He should, if possible, be immediately sent to the police-station and be placed in the custody of the officer in charge of the station.[1]

1. Scope of the section.—It is a general principle of law that when the legislature empowers an officer to delegate an authority to do a certain act, to another person, it necessarily implies that the original authority to do such act is fully and completely in the officer himself, but that it is necessary, for the exigencies of business that it should be done, in the majority of cases, by persons acting under authority derived from him.[1] This section illustrates this principle and enacts that a Magistrate who can issue a warrant of arrest can himself make such arrest. For another illustration of the same principle see S. 105, infra.

A Magistrate has power under several sections of the Code to issue a warrant of arrest.[2] Thus a Magistrate taking cognisance of an offence under S. 190 can issue a warrant of arrest against the accused under S. 204 of the Sections 152 and 153 of the Code of 1872 were limited to the form of summons issued against accused persons only. This section applies to summons to accused as well as other persons.

Difference with reference to the Code of 1872—

2. Scope of the section.—Various sections of the Code provide for the issue of summons in various cases:—

Section 94 (to produce documents or things).
Section 145, Sub-S. (9) (to witness to attend or produce any document or thing).
Section 204 (to accused persons).
Sections 216 and 252 (to witnesses).
Sections 326 and 327 (to assessors and jurors).

This section enacts in what form all such summonses should be issued. Section 328 further enacts the form in which a summons to a juror or assessor should be issued.

The Chartered High Courts have under S. 107 of the Government of India Act and the non-chartered High Courts have under S. 554 of the Code; power to frame forms for every proceeding in Subordinate Criminal Courts and subject to such power the forms set forth in Sch. V of the Code may be used for the purposes therein mentioned with such variation as the circumstances of each case require (see S. 555, infra).

3. Difference between Summons and warrant.—See S. 75, Note 2, infra.

4. Duty of Court on application for summons.—See Ss. 204 and 252 infra.

5. Form and contents of summons.—Schedule V of the Code provides forms of summons in the following cases:—

Form 1.—Summons to an accused person. This summons should state shortly the offence charged. As a general principle an accused person is entitled to have conveyed to him by the process whether summons or warrant information which should specify not only the technical designation of the offence but the acts for which the accused would have to answer.[1] In Emperor v. Kunwar Ranvmjai Singh[2] it was held that the form of summons should contain particulars of the place where and the time when the offence was committed as also the nature of such offence, and that in the absence of such particulars, the proceedings taken thereon if objected to, must necessarily be invalid. According to the High Court of Madras, however, it does not seem to be necessary to set out all the facts on which the accused is charged.[3]

S. 68, Notes 5—9.

Form No. 12.—Summons on information of a probable breach of the peace.

Form No. 31.—Summons to a witness. This summons must contain the place at which the day and the time of the day when the attendance of the witness is required.[4]

6. "Shall be in writing".—See S. 75, Note 3, infra.

7. "Signed and sealed".—A summons not sealed as required by this section is illegal. "Signed" in this section as well as in S. 75, infra denotes full signature and not merely the affixing of the initials of the officer. See S. 75, Note 3. As to the effect of not observing the formalities, see Note 9, infra.

8. By whom to be signed—High Court Rules.—The summons should be signed and sealed by the Presiding officer of such Court, or by such other officer as the High Court may, from time to time direct. See the rules framed by the various High Courts on this point.

9. Effect of not observing the formalities.—A person legally bound to attend the Court in obedience to a summons, but who intentionally disobeys the same is liable to be punished for an offence under S. 174 of the Penal Code.[1-a] In the case of a summons to an accused person it has been held by the High Court of Allahabad and the Chief Court of Oudh that a summons which does not state the particulars of the place where, the time when, and the nature of the offence charged, is illegal and may be disregarded by the person summoned, and that proceedings, if objected to, must necessarily be invalid.[1] The High Court of Madras has also held that a summons not sealed is illegal and that no sanction to prosecute can be granted against any person for disobeying such summons.[2] Where the summons omitted to specify the place at which the person summoned was required to attend, and on the failure of such person to attend the Court proceeded to dispose of the case ex parte, it was held by the same High Court that the Magistrate ought to set aside the ex parte order on an application therefor by the accused.[3] So also it has been held that a failure to attend in obedience to a summons is not an offence where it does not specify the place where the attendance is required.[3-a] According to the High Court of Bombay, however, it would appear that a defect of any kind in the summons is only an "error, omission or irregularity" which, under S. 537 of the Code is not sufficient to upset the finding and sentence, unless it has in fact occasioned a failure of justice, i.e., unless it has unfairly affected the petitioner's defence on the merits.[4] See also Note 3, Pt. 10 to S. 75, infra.

10. Summons to appear at a place outside British India.—A summons directing a person to appear at a place outside British India is bad in law, and disobedience of such summons does not amount to an offence under S. 174, Indian Penal Code.[1]

11. Service of summons.—Sub-S. 2 enacts that the summons shall be served by a Police-Officer, or, subject to such rules as the Local Government may prescribe in this behalf, by an officer of the Court issuing it, or other public servant.[1] As to who is a Police-Officer see Ss. 11 and 44 of Act 24 of 1859 and for the definition of "public servant" see S. 21 of the Indian Penal Code. Sections 69 to 73 deal with the mode of service.

A summons sent by registered post is invalid as not being in accordance with this section and a disobedience of such a summons is not an offence.[2] See also the undermentioned case.[3]

12. By whom summons is to be served.—See Note 11, supra.

13. Service of summons of Feudatory States.—There is no provision for the service in British India of summons issued by Courts of foreign and Feudatory States. Where a person commits an offence in a foreign state and takes refuge in British India the fugitive may be surrendered to that state if the provisions of the Indian Extradition Act (Act 15 of 1903) apply.

"When a person who has committed an offence in one country escapes to another, what is the duty of the latter with regard to him? Should the country of refuge try him in its own Courts according to its own laws, or deliver him up to the country whose laws he has broken? To the general question, international law gives no certain answer. Some Jurists, Grotius among them, incline to hold that a state is bound to give up fugitive criminals, but the majority appear to deny the obligation as a matter of right and prefer to put it on the ground of courtesy. And the universal practice of nations is to surrender criminals only in consequence of some special treaty with the country which demands them." (Prefatory note to the Extradition Act, 1870, 33 and 34 Vic. Ch. 52). S. 68, Notes 13—15.

14. Disobedience of summons.—See Note 9, supra and S. 174 of the Penal Code. The offence contemplated by the latter section is an omission to appear at a particular time and at a particular place before a specified public functionary. Where therefore on the date specified in the summons, the public officer was himself absent, no offence under S. 174 of the Penal Code is committed if the person summoned to appear before such public officer fails to attend the Court though intentionally.[1] Similarly, where the case is not taken up at all on the date stated in the summons failure to attend is not an offence.[1-a] If the public officer has no authority to issue the summons a disobedience of such a summons is no offence. Thus where 16 persons in the District of Kumaun were summoned by the Tahsildar Magistrate to appear before him to explain why they had refused to serve as coolies and upon their failure to appear, they were prosecuted for an offence under S. 174 of the Penal Code, it was held that the Magistrate had no authority to issue the summons for the purpose mentioned and that the accused were not guilty under the section.[2] Illness incapacitating a person from attending to his ordinary avocations is sufficient excuse for not attending in obedience to a summons.[3]

15. When persons summoned can depart.—Where the summons contains as in the case of a summons to a witness a direction that the person summoned should not depart without leave it is not lawful to the person to leave the Court without such permission.[1] But where there is no such direction the summons does not oblige him to remain waiting in attendance in Court for more than a reasonable time,[2] and if he departs after waiting for a reasonable time, no offence under S. 174, I.P.C. is committed.[3]

(1) The provision as to the necessity for the receipt to be signed by the person served, was newly added in the Code of 1872.

(2) Sub-Section 3 of the present section is new.

2. Summons how served.—This section and Ss. 70 to 72 infra deal with the manner of service of summons. The proof of service is dealt with by S. 74. Wherever practicable a summons should be served personally on the person to be summoned (S. 69). When such person cannot, by the exercise of due diligence be found, it should be served on an adult male member of his family, or in a presidency town on his servant (S. 70). If service cannot, after the exercise of due diligence, be effected in the manner prescribed by Ss. 69 and 70, a duplicate of the summons should be affixed to a conspicuous part of the house or homestead in which the person summoned ordinarily resides (S. 71). When the person summoned is the servant of the Government or of a Railway Company the summons should be sent to the Officer in which such person is employed to be served in the manner provided by S. 69 (S. 72). Where a summons is not served as prescribed by the Code, no conviction can be had against any person for disobedience of summons under S. 174 of the Penal Code.[1]

3. Personal service.—Whenever practicable it should be served personally. Substituted service cannot be resorted to unless, in spite of reasonable diligence, personal service is not practicable.[1] A personal service may be made either by delivering or tendering the summons but the tender must be a real tender of a document which is understood by the person to be served.[2] Merely showing the summons to the person to be served is not sufficient service.[3]

4. Service on Incorporated Company—Sub-Section 3.—Sub-Section 3 is new. A summons to an incorporated company or a body corporate may be served on the secretary, the President, and the members of the Managing committee.[1]

5. Preventing service of summons is an offence.—The prevention of the service of summons will amount to an offence under S. 173 of the Penal Code if the conditions of that section are satisfied. The mere refusal to receive the summons or to sign the receipt of summons is however not an offence under the section.[1] But a getting away from the serving officer with the intention of not allowing him to hold any communication at all, and shutting oneself up in the house will amount to "intentionally preventing service" within the meaning of S. 173 of the Penal Code. The question, whether there has been a preventing of personal service, is however, in each case, a question of fact.[2]

6. Disobedience of summons.—See Note 14 to S. 68.

Service on adult male member. See Note 2, Pt. 2.

1. Scope of the section.—The procedure prescribed by this section is to be followed when by the exercise of due diligence, the person summoned cannot be found. In such a case, the service may be made—

(1) by leaving one of the duplicates of the summons with some adult male member of his family or

(2) in a Presidency Town, with his servant residing with him.

In the absence of proof that the person summoned cannot, after exercise of due diligence be found, a service on an adult male member of the house or on his durwan is illegal.[1] The Court should have an affidavit from the person who was entrusted with the service, that he has made his best endeavours to effect personal service and that he has been unable to do so either on the ground that the person summoned has evaded service, or that he cannot be found.[2] See also S. 74 infra.

2. Service on servant.—It is only in a Presidency Town that a summons under the Code can be served on the servant of the person sought to be summoned. A summons for attendance as a juror for instance outside the Presidency Town cannot properly be served by leaving it with the servant of the person summoned.[1] It must be served by leaving the duplicate summons with the adult male member of his family.[2]

3. Service on female members of the family.—A service on female members of the family of the person to be summoned is not warranted by this section.[1]

DISOBEDIENCE OF SUMMONS	5

1. Legislative changes.—

(1) The words "If service in the manner mentioned" have been substituted for the words "If the signature mentioned" which occurred in the corresponding section of the Code of 1882.

(2) The word "effected" has been substituted for the word "obtained."

2. Scope of the Section.—This section will apply only where, the service mentioned in Ss. 69 and 70, cannot after the exercise of due diligence, be effected. In other words unless the summons cannot after the exercise of due diligence be served personally as provided by S. 69 or on an adult male

	Note No.
SCOPE OF THE SECTION	1
SUMMONS TO OFFICERS OF RAILWAY POLICE	2
SUMMONS TO MEDICAL OFFICERS	3

1. Scope of the Section.—This section applies only to summonses issued by a Court of Justice and not to orders of Police Officers investigating a crime under Ch. 14 of the Code.[1] Whenever a summons is issued by one Court to another Court it should as a matter of courtesy be accompanied by a letter intimating, in all cases in which it may not be necessary to examine the judge or presiding officer himself, that the attendance of the ministerial officer to produce the records is all that is required.[2]

2. Summons to officers of Railway Police.—A summons to a Sub-Inspector of Railway Police should be served through the Superintendent of Railway Police for the District.[1]

3. Summons to Medical Officers.—Summonses on Medical Subordinate Officers should be served through the head of the office to whom he is subordinate.[1]

73.* When a Court desires that a summons issued by it shall be served at any place outside the local limits of its jurisdiction, it shall ordinarily send such summons in duplicate to a Magistrate within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the person summoned resides or is, to be there served.

Service of summons outside local limits.

1. Service of summons outside local limits.—There was no such provision in the Code of 1861 but the High Court of Madras held on an interpretation of some of the provisions of that Code, that the Court had such power.[1] This section was first introduced by Act IV of 1877. It prescribes how a summons is to be served at any place outside the local limits of its jurisdiction.

73. When a Court desires that a summons issued by it shall be served at any place outside the local limits of its jurisdiction, it shall ordinariiy send such summons, in duplicate, to a Magistrate within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the person summoned resides or is, to be there served.

Obviously such place must be one to which the Code applies. There is no procedure provided even in this Code for service on a person in a place outside British India, as for instance in England.[2] S. 73. Note 1.

In the undermentioned case[3] in which the question arose as to the validity of the service of a rule in proceedings for contempt of Court on a person in the Native State of Baroda it was held such service, with the Gaiekwar's previous assent is valid service, when the parties so served were already represented by counsel in the British Court, and where the only object of the service beyond territory was to effect personal service.

74.* (1) When a summons issued by a Court is served outside the local limits of its jurisdiction, and in any case where the officer who has served a summons is not present at the hearing of the case, an affidavit, purporting to be made before a Magistrate, that such summons has been served, and a duplicate of the summons purporting to be endorsed (in manner provided by section 69 or section 70) by the person to whom it was delivered or tendered or with whom it was left, shall be admissible in evidence, and the statements made therein shall be deemed to be correct unless and until the contrary is proved.

Proof of service in such cases, and when serving officer not present.

(2) The affidavit mentioned in this section may be attached to the duplicate of the summons and returned to the Court.

1. Scope of the Section.—A service may be proved as provided by this section in the following cases:—

(1) Where the summons is served outside the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court issuing it, or

74. When a summons issued by a Court is served outside the local limits of its jurisdiction, and in any case where the officer who has served a summons is not present at the hearing of the case, an affidavit purporting to be made before a Magistrate, that such summons has been served, and a duplicate of the summons purporting to be endorsed (in manner provided by S. 69 or S. 70) by the person to whom it was delivered or tendered, or with whom it was left, shall be admissible in evidence, and the statements made therein shall be deemed to be correct unless and until the contrary is proved.

Proof of service in such cases, and when serving officer not present.

The affidavit mentioned in this section may be attached to the duplicate of the summons and returned to the Court.

CHAPTER XIII.

Of the warrant.

159. Every warrant issued by a Magistrate shall be in writing, and shall be signed and sealed by such Magistrate, shall be in the form (B) given in the second schedule to this Act, or to the like effect.

Form of warrant.

The warrant issued under this chapter remains in force until the person arrested is brought into the presence of the Magistrate who issued it, and so long as he remains before such Magistrate. If the person arrested is to be remanded to custody, an order must be made under section one hundred and ninety four or a warrant issued under section three hundred and three.

1. Scope of the section.—This section deals with the form of a warrant of arrest issued under the Code. The conditions under which and the grounds on which warrants of arrest may be issued are to be found in various sections of the Code. Such as Ss. 90, 107 to 110, 204 or 480.

2. Difference between summons and warrant.—A warrant is an order addressed to a person, usually a police officer, to do any particular act such as the apprehension and production of an offender or the search for a thing.[1] A summons, on the other hand, is always addressed to the person who is required either to attend or to produce a document or thing.[1-a]

A warrant addressed to a Police-Officer to apprehend an offender and to bring him before a Magistrate is not "a summons, notice, or order" within the meaning of S. 172 of the Indian Penal Code.[2]

Of the warrant and its execution.

Form of warrant.

76. Every warrant issued by a Magistrate shall be in writing, and shall be signed and sealed by such Magistrate, and shall be in the form (B) given in the Appendix, or to the like effect.

S. 75, Note 3.

3. Requisites of a valid arrest warrant.—A warrant of arrest in order to be valid must fulfil the following requirements:—

(a) It must be in writing.

(b) It must be signed by the presiding officer. A warrant which is not signed by the authority issuing it is invalid and any arrest made in execution of such warrant is illegal.[1] See also Note 9 to S. 68 ante.

The official designation of the person signing and the place of signing should appear on the face of the warrant.[2] A warrant signed by a Magistrate at a place outside the limits of his jurisdiction has been held to be illegal.[3]

The signature must be that of the presiding officer of the Court and not by any other Magistrate. Thus, a warrant signed by an Honorary Magistrate, who is not the Magistrate who has taken cognizance of the offence and on whose file the case is pending, is invalid.[4] The presiding officer need not, however, be the same Magistrate who has first taken cognizance of the case. The signature contemplated is that of the officer who is actually presiding at the time of the issue of the warrant.[5]

The signature should be made with a pen and not a stamp so that its authenticity may admit of proof. But the affixing of a signature by a stamp is only an irregularity which does not vitiate the warrant.[6] The signature should be by full name, but a signing by affixing of initials is only an irregularity which is cured by the provisions of S. 537 of the Code.[7]

(c) It must be sealed.—The reason for requiring the affixing of a seal is firstly to show that the instrument to which it is attached has not been issued without due deliberation and secondly, to prove the authority of the instrument.[8] An omission to affix the seal renders the warrant invalid.[9] In the undermentioned case[10] the Chief Court of Punjab has, however, taken a contrary view and held that the absence of a seal in a warrant is only an irregularity

(d) It must be addressed to a police officer or other person.—Under S. 77, infra every warrant of arrest should be directed to one or more police-officers or to any other person or persons. A blank warrant without specifying the addressee thereof is invalid.[11] It is, however, not always necessary that the name of the particular person addressed should be mentioned; a warrant addressed to the "Bailiff of the Court" without naming the Bailiff is perfectly legal.[12] But an endorsement of a warrant under S. 79 infra should be made by name to the person to whom it is endorsed.[13]

(e) The person to be arrested must be clearly identified.—A warrant should contain a distinct and unequivocal intimation to the person to be arrested that he is the individual meant to be apprehended[14] it should not merely bear the full name of the person to be arrested but also his description i.e., the place where he resides if not also his occupation so that there may be no doubt as to his identity. A warrant to arrest "Solomon Moses" simply has been held to be defective as the name is not an uncommon one and there may be more than one having such a name.[15] Where a person is prosecuted for disobedience of a warrant of arrest, the onus is on the prosecution to show that the accused was the person against whom the warrant had been issued. In execution of a warrant made out against D son of G a certain D was arrested but was rescued therefrom—D was prosecuted for disobedience of warrant and in the course of the trial it appeared that the accused was the son of R and not of G. It was held that the arrest was not a legal one and that the accused was not guilty of disobedience.[16]

(f) The Offence must be specified.—A warrant which does not specify a punishable offence and which has been issued upon a statement not sufficient to make out any offence is illegal.[17]

(g) The substance of the warrant should be notified.—As required by S. 80 infra the person executing the warrant is bound to notify its substance to the person arrested. If not the arrest is not legal.[18]

4. Form of warrant.—As to form of a warrant under this section see Schedule V, Form No. 2. A strict adherence to the form prescribed tends to prevent the warrant being granted irregularly and without enquiry as to whether the circumstances justify its issue.[1] S. 75, Notes 4—8.

Where any special or local Act does not provide a form of the warrant of arrest, the form prescribed by the Code should be adopted.[2]

5. General warrant.—A general warrant or a warrant to apprehend all persons committing a particular offence is not authorised by the Code and is illegal.[1] Similarly a warrant to search any house which the police-officer to whom it is directed may think fit is illegal.[2]

5-a. Special warrant.—In the case of a special warrant the only person who can execute it is the officer named in the warrant. A warrant which can be endorsed over to another officer for execution is not a special warrant.[1]

6. Blank warrant.—A blank warrant, or a warrant not addressed to any officer or person is invalid. (See note 3(d) supra).

7. Conditional warrant.—A warrant which provides that the person against whom it is issued should do a particular thing and that, if he does not do so, he should be arrested is invalid. Thus, a warrant which contains an order that if A does not remove himself forthwith from British India, he should be arrested is illegal.[1]

8. Effect of illegal warrant.—Proceedings taken in pursuance of an illegal warrant[1] or a warrant issued without jurisdiction[2] are void and resistance to the officer executing such a warrant is not punishable. But an irregularity or defect in the warrant does not vitiate the warrant. (vide S. 537).

As to what are illegalities and irregularities in a warrant, see Note 3, supra.

9. "Until it is cancelled by the Court issuing it".—A warrant of arrest remains in force until it is cancelled by the court issuing it.[1] The Court has a discretion on sufficient cause being shown to cancel the warrant and issue a summons instead.[2] When once the Court that issues a warrant cancels it, it ceases to be effective. A District Magistrate has thus no power to direct a Sub-Divisional Magistrate to re-issue a warrant cancelled by him.[3]

10. "Or until it is executed".—The fact that the returnable date mentioned in the warrant has expired does not effect its executability after that period.[1] When the law has not fixed any period, the presumption is that it retains its validity until it is executed.[2] Similarly a warrant on which there is an endorsement for bail to be taken for the appearance of an accused on a certain date does not lapse on the expiry of that date. It is only the direction to take bail that lapses but the warrant continues in force.[3]

The force of a warrant of arrest is, however, at an end when the accused is arrested and brought before the Magistrate.[4] A person should not be arrested after he had surrendered and been released on bail.[5]

11. Mode of executing a warrant.—See Ss.76-80 infra. The provisions of the Code relating to the issue and execution of a warrant apply in general to warrants issued under special Acts in the absence of any contrary provision thereunder.[1] See S. 5, ante.

Recognizance to be forwarded.

Magistrate may direct bail to be taken.

160. It shall be in the discretion of the Magistrate, in issuing a warrant for arrest of any person, to direct by endorsement on the warrant that, if such person be willing and ready to give bail, in a sum to be fixed by the Magistrate for his appearance before the Magistrate on a specified day (which sum and day shall be named in such endorsement), to answer the complaint, the officer to whom the warrant is directed shall accept such bail, and shall release from custody the person complained against.

Bail-bond to be forwarded.

Magistrate may direct bail to be taken.

181. It shall be in the discretion of the Magistrate in issuing his warrant for the arrest of any person against whom a complaint has been made, to direct by endorsement on the warrant that, if such person be willing and ready to give bail in a sum to be fixed by the Magistrate for his appearance before the Magistrate to be named in the warrant on a specified day to answer the complaint, the officer to whom the warrant is directed shall accept such bail, and shall release the person from custody. In the event of bail being given, the officer shall forward the bail bond to the Magistrate.

1. Scope of the section.—This section provides for the issue of "bailable warrants." It is not limited to warrants of arrest issued against an accused person but applies to all warrants of arrest. Thus a warrant of arrest issued against a recalcitrant witness may direct release on security.[1]

2. Contents of endorsement.—The endorsement for taking security must state:—

(1) The number of the sureties.
(2) The amount of the bonds.
(3) The time at which the person sought to be arrested is to attend the court.

A warrant not complying with these requirements is not in proper form.[1]

As to the form of the endorsement. See form No. II, Sch. V.

3. "Time at which he is to attend before such Court".—Where the date on which the person to be arrested is to attend before the court passes without the person being arrested, the direction for bail lapses, though the warrant itself continues in force and the person may be arrested even after that date. S. 75 and this section must be read together.[1]

4. Endorsement for bail on personal recognisance.—Where an endorsement directs the release of the arrested person on his personal recognisance, the police-officer executing the warrant is not authorised to take security from any person and a bond so taken will be void.[1]

5. Arresting officer's powers to refuse recognisance.—Where an endorsement for taking a bond has been made on the warrant of arrest, the arresting officer has only to see whether the sureties offered are worth the amount stated in the endorsement. He has no power to enquire whether the Omission of the name of the police-officer. See Note 2, Pt. 1.

1. Legislative changes.—Under the Code of 1861 the warrant was required to be directed "to a police-officer". The section was altered in the later Codes so as to enable a warrant to be directed to one or more police-officers or persons.

2. "Shall ordinarily be directed to one or more police-officers".—This section merely directs that a warrant shall be ordinarily directed to one or more police-officers. It does not say that the name of that police-officer as well as his designation is to be inserted in the warrant. A warrant addressed therefore, to "the sub-inspector of police of X" is perfectly legal.[1] The section is directory and not mandatory and a substantial compliance with its provisions is sufficient.[2]

This section has been held to apply also to cases coming under S. 10 of the Burma Gambling Act (I of 1899).[3] See also S. 5 ante.

3. Warrant, when may be directed to persons other than police-officers.—A warrant may be directed to persons other than police-officers, but the following conditions are necessary in order to enable the Court to do so:—

(1) There must be the necessity to arrest.
(2) The necessity must be for immediate arrest and
(3) No police officer should be immediately available.[1]

1. Legislative Changes.—Under the Code of 1861, the warrant could be endorsed only by the person to whom the warrant was directed. The endorsee could not re-endorse it to any other police-officer. The words "by the officer to whom it is directed or endorsed" now show that such re-endorsement can be made.

Should the person against whom such warrant is issued to be arrested, he shall be made over to the nearest police-officer with the warant, and such police-officer shall cause such accused person to be carried before the Magistrate having jurisdiction, unless bail may be and is taken under section one hundred and sixty.

S. 79 Notes 2-6.

2. Applicability of the section to warrants under other laws.—See S. 5 of the Code and the undermentioned cases.[1]

2-a. Special warrant.—A special warrant can be executed only by the officer named in it and cannot be endorsed over to any other officer for execution.[1]

3. Directed to any police-officer.—See Note 2 to S. 77, ante.

4. By any other police-officer.—An endorsement under this section can be made only to a police-officer. Process servers cannot be properly regarded as police-officers.[1] This section extends the authority to execute a warrant only to a police-officer whose name is endorsed on the warrant. An endorsement to the Sub-Inspector of a particular thana will not enable a Head constable who is temporarily in charge of the thana, to execute the warrant.[2]

5. Endorsement—how made.—The essential thing about the endorsement is that it should be in writing. The direction that the endorsement should be written upon the warrant itself is not of such vital importance and it is immaterial if the writing is on the warrant or on a separate piece of paper. It is further not necessary that the authorisation should be addressed to the endorsee so long as the authorisation is clear.[1] The endorsement of the warrant should state the name of the endorsee. It is not necessary that the official designation of the endorsee should also be given, even though Form No. 2 of Sch. 5 seems to suggest that both the name and the designation should be given.[2] An endorsement to "the officer in charge of a police station" without the name of such officer being given is not sufficient.[3]

An endorsement should obviously be signed by the endorser. It is desirable that such signature should be a full signature. But an endorsement by merely subscribing initials is not invalid.[4]

6. "By the officer to whom it is directed or endorsed".—The endorsement must be made only by the police-officer to whom the warrant is directed or endorsed. A warrant directed to a Sub-Inspector cannot be endorsed by the Head constable unless he was at that time actually filling the office of the Sub-Inspector.[1]

1. Shall notify the substance.—The police-officer or other person executing a warrant of arrest is bound to notify the substance of the warrant to the person sought to be arrested.[1] The object of this is to give the person sought to be arrested a reasonable opportunity of knowing on what charge he was being arrested and before which Court he was to appear so that he may take steps for arranging for his defence.[2] An arrest made without notifying the substance of the warrant as required by this section is illegal.[3] But where the person arrested has a reasonable opportunity of knowing on what charge he is being arrested, the requirements of the section is satisfied and the police-officer need not go through the formality of explaining the particulars of the warrant to the accused.[4]

It is not necessary that the officer or other person arresting another under a warrant, should in his report state the fact of his having notified the substance of the warrant as required by this section.[5] As to applicability of section to arrest under the written orders of a police-officer, under S. 56, see S. 56, N. 6.

2. Show him the warrant if so desired.—The person sought to be arrested is entitled to see if the person arresting has authority to do so and to ask for inspection ot the warrant.[1] So the police officer should not proceed to arrest without having the warrant in his possession.[2] It is enough however, if he has the warrant in his possession available for inspection; it is not necessary to show the same unless so required.[3] When so required the warrant must be shown in such a manner as to give the person arrested an opportunity to read the same. Thus where the police-officer merely held the warrant in his hand along with other warrants without allowing the person arrested to read the same it was held that requirements of the section were not satisfied.[4]

3. Effect of non-compliance with the section.—It has been seen in Note 1 ante that an arrest without complying with the requirements of the section is illegal. It has also been seen that the requirements of the section are satisfied if either the substance of the warrant is notified by the arrestor or, the warrant is shown to the person arrested to enable him to understand the contents thereof. An arrest under a warrant may also be supported under the provisions of S. 46, sub-S. 2 even without a notification of the substance of the warrant under this section.[1] Except in the above case an arrest made without complying with the requirements of the section is illegal and a resistance or obstruction thereto is no offence.[2]

The illegality of an arrest will not however, vitiate a conviction for any substantive offence with which the person arrested is charged, unless there is a failure of justice within S. 537 of the Code.[3]

1. Legislative Changes.—The words "required by this Act" which occurred in the corresponding sections of the Codes of 1861 and 1872 were substituted by the words "required by law" in S. 81 of the Code of 1882. There is no difference between the Code of 1882 and the present Code, in this respect.

2. Scope of the section.—S. 60 ante requires that a police-officer making an arrest without warrant shall without unnecessary delay take or send the person arrested to the Magistrate having jurisdiction or before the officer in charge of a police-station. This section requires that a police-officer or other person executing a warrant of arrest should bring the person arrested before the Court without unnecessary delay.[1] The Magistrate has then no authority to further detain him in custody or to remand him to prison without some reason made manifest to him, either in the shape of sworn testimony given before him or in some other form which can be put upon the record and which is sufficient to justify him in sending the prisoner to prison.

Applicability to warrants under Act XIII of 1859. Note 1, Pt. 1. Competency to endorse warrants—Power of Magistrates. See Sch. III, Cl. 2.

1. Scope and application.—This section read with S. 5, sub-S. 2, applies also to warrants issued under any other law, except when it is otherwise provided by such Law. See Notes to S. 5 ante and the undermentioned cases.[1]

2. Language of warrant.—Warrants issuing out of a Magistrate's Court should be written in the language in ordinary use in the district in which it is held, that is to say, (with certain exceptions), the language in which the proceedings of the several Courts are conducted. But where a warrant is sent for execution to the Magistrate of a District where a different language is in ordinary use, the warrant should be accompanied by a translation, certified by the transmitting Magistrate to be correct, into such other language, or into English. Moreover, in such cases it would be proper that the warrant should always be accompanied by a letter in English requesting its execution.[1]

S. 84, Note 1.

Difference between the Codes of 1861 and 1872.—Under the Code of 1861 a warrant could be executed in any place even if it was out of jurisdiction. The Code of 1872 provided that a Magistrate may direct a warrant to be executed outside his local jurisdiction either after endorsement by a Magistrate within whose local jurisdiction it is to be executed or without such endorsement. In the former case the warrant may be sent by post to such Magistrate. In the latter case it may be entrusted to a police-officer to be taken to such Magistrate or to a police-officer not below the rank of a police-officer in charge of a station within whose jurisdiction it is to be executed.

Difference between the Codes of 1872 and 1882.—Under the Code of 1882 if a warrant is to be executed outside the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Magistrate issuing the warrant, the police-officer to whom it is directed, should ordinarily take it for endorsement to a Magistrate or to a police-officer not below the rank of an officer in charge of a station within whose jurisdiction it is to be executed. If the obtaining of the endorsement will cause delay which is likely to prevent execution, the warrant could be executed without endorsement.

Difference between the Codes of 1882 and 1898.—S. 84 of the Code of 1882 applied also to the police in the Town of Bombay. The present section as amended by Bombay Act 4 of 1902 does not apply to the police in Bombay.

Magistrate who issued the warrant, direct his removal in custody to the Magistrate who issued the warrant, or, if the offence be bailable, and the person arrested be ready and willing to give bail, shall take bail, for his appearance before the Magistrate who issued the warrant, and the recognizance or bail-bond shall be forwarded to such Magistrate.

84. When any person against whom a warrant is issued by a Magistrate shall escape, go into, or be in any place out of the jurisdiction of the Magistrate issuing such warrant, the warrant may be executed in such place; and if the person against whom the warrant is issued is arrested in such place, the police-officer, or other person executing the warrant, shall carry him before the Magistrate of the District, or some other Magistrate within whose jurisdiction the arrest was made. If the offence with which the person arrested is charged be bailable, and such person shall be willing and ready to give bail for his appearance before the Magistrate by whom the warrant was issued, the Magistrate before whom such person is brought, shall take bail of such person for his appearance accordingly, and shall release him from custody, and forward the recognizance or other bail-bond to the Magistrate by whom the warrant was issued. If the offence be not bailable, or if the person arrested be unable to find bail, he shall be forwarded to the Magistrate by whom the warrant was issued. If the arrest be made within the local limits of the jurisdiction of a Supreme Court of Judicature, the person accused, when arrested, shall be taken before the Chief Commissioner of Police, or a Police Magistrate. Such Chief Commissioner or Police Magistrate shall forward the person arrested to the Magistrate by whom the warrant was issued, or if the offence with which the person arrested is charged be bailable, shall admit him to bail, and shall forward the recognizance or other bail-bond to such Magistrate.

Procedure on arrest of person against whom warrant issued.

85.* When a warrant of arrest is executed outside the district in which it was issued, the person arrested shall, unless the Court which issued the warrant is within twenty miles of the place of arrest or is nearer than the Magistrate or District Superintendent of Police or the Commissioner of Police in a presidency-town within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the arrest was made, or unless security is taken under S. 76, be taken before such Magistrate or Commissioner or District Superintendent.

The section, so far as it applies to the police in the Town of Bombay, is repealed by S. 2 (1) of the City of Bombay Police Act, 1902.

1. Legislative Changes:—

(1) Under the Code of 1861, the person arrested had to be taken in the first instance to the Magistrate who issued the warrant where the place of arrest was within 20 miles from the place at which the warrant was issued. In other cases he had to be taken before the Magistrate of the District or some other Magistrate within whose jurisdiction the arrest was made.

(2) Under the Code of 1872, the arrested person had to be taken before the Magistrate in whose local jurisdiction the arrest was made unless,

(a) the Magistrate issuing the warrant was within 20 miles of the place of arrest or

(b) He is nearer to the place of arrest than the Magistrate within whose jurisdiction the arrest was made.

or, if the offence be bailable, and the person arrested be ready and willing to give bail, shall take bail for his appearance before the Magistrate who issued the warrant, and the recognizance or bail-bond shall be forwarded to such Magistrate.

84. When any person against whom a warrant is issued by a Magistrate shall escape, go into, or be, in any place out of the jurisdiction of the Magistrate issuing such warrant, the warrant may be executed in such place; and if the person against whom the warrant is issued is arrested in such place, the police-officer, or other person executing the warrant, shall carry him before the Magistrate of the District, or some other Magistrate within whose jurisdiction the arrest was made. If the offence with which the person arrested is charged be bailable, and such person shall be willing and ready to give bail for his appearance before the Magistrate by whom the warrant was issued, the Magistrate before whom such person is brought, shall take bail of such person for his appearance accordingly, and shall release him from custody, and forward the recognizance or other bail-bond to the Magistrate by whom the warrant was issued. If the offence be not bailable, or if the person arrested be unable to find bail, he shall be forwarded to the Magistrate by whom the warrant was issued. If the arrest be made within the local limits of the jurisdiction of a Supreme Court of Judicature, the person accused, when arrested, shall be taken before the Chief Commissioner of Police, or a Police Magistrate. Such Chief Commissioner or Police Magistrate shall forward the person arrested to the Magistrate by whom the warrant was issued, or if the offence with which the person arrested is charged be bailable, shall admit him to bail, and shall forward the recognizance or other bail bond to such Magistrate.

Warrant executed in another jurisdiction.

If arrest be made within jurisdiction of a Supreme Court.

may publish a written proclamation requiring him to appear at a specified place and at a specified time not less than thirty days from the date of publishing such proclamation. S. 87.

(2) The proclamation shall be published as follows:—

(a) It shall be publicly read in some conspicuous place of the town or village in which such person ordinarily resides;

(b) it shall be fixed to some conspicuous part of the house or homestead in which such person ordinarily resides or to some conspicuous place of such town or village; and

(c) a copy thereof shall be affixed to some conspicuous part of the Court-house.

(3) A statement in writing by the Court issuing the proclamation to the effect that the proclamation was duly published on a specified day shall be conclusive evidence that the requirements of this section have been complied with, and that the proclamation was published on such day.

(a) it shall be publicly read in some conspicuous place of the town or village in which such person ordinarily resides;

(b) it shall be affixed to some conspicuous part of the house or homestated in which such person ordinarily resides or to some conspicuous place of such town or village; and

Proclamation for person absconding.

171. If any person accused of an offence not coming within section one hundred and forty-eight absconds or conceals himself, so that, upon a warrant issued against him, he cannot be found, the Magistrate having jurisdiction shall, if he thinks, whether after taking evidence or not, that such person absconds or conceals himself for the purpose of avoiding the service of the warrant, issue a written proclamation, requiring him to appear to answer the complaint within a fixed period not less than thirty days.

Such proclamation shall be publicly read in some conspicuous place of the town or village in which the accused person usually resides, and shall be affixed on some conspicuous part of his ordinary place of abode, or on some conspicuous place of such town or village.

A copy of the proclamation shall also be affixed on some conspicuous part of such Magistrate's Court house.

A statement by the Magistrate to the effect that the proclamation was duly made shall be conclusive evidence of due compliance with the law.

353. If such warrant cannot be executed, and the Court or Magistrate considers that the witness absconds or conceals himself for the purpose of avoiding the service thereof, it or he may issue a proclamation, requiring the attendance of such witness to give evidence at a time and place to be named therein, to be affixed on some conspicuous part of such witness' ordinary place of abode.

183. If any person accused of an offence absconds or conceals himself, so that upon a warrant issued against him he cannot be found, the Magistrate shall, if satisfied that such person absconds or conceals himself for the purpose of avoiding the service of the warrant, issue a written proclamation, requiring such person to appear to answer the complaint within a fixed period not less than thirty days. The proclamation shall be publicly read in some conspicuous place of the town or village in which such person usually resides, and shall be affixed on some conspicuous part of the ordinary place of abode of such person, or on some conspicuous place of such town or village. A copy of the proclamation shall also be affixed on some conspicuous part of the Courthouse of the Magistrate.

189. If the warrant cannot be served, and the Magistrate is satisfied that the witness absconds or conceals himself for the purpose of avoiding the service thereof, the Magistrate may issue a proclamation, requiring the attendance of such witness to give evidence at a time and place to be named therein, to be affixed on some conspicuous part of his ordinary place of abode, and if such witness shall not attend at the time and place named in such proclamation, the Magistrate may order the attachment of any moveable property belonging to such witness to such amount as he shall deem reasonable, not being in excess of the amount of costs of attachment and of any fine to which such witness may be liable under the provisions of the following section. Such order shall not authorize the attachment of any property out of the jurisdiction of the Magistrate by whom it is made, but it shall authorise the attachment of property in the jurisdiction of any Magistrate by whom such order is endorsed.

1. Legislative Changes.—S. 183 of the Code of 1861 and S. 171 of the Code of 1872, corresponding to this section did not apply to summons cases and no proclamation or attachment could issue in such cases.[1] The present section applies to any person against whom a warrant has been issued.

2. Proclamation—when can be issued.—The processes of proclamation and attachment are exceptional remedies and should not be issued as a matter of course whenever a warrant fails of its effect.[1] It is necessary that the following conditions are satisfied:

(a) A warrant should have been legally issued against a person. Where the warrant issued by a Magistrate is without jurisdiction[2] or does not fulfil the requirements of law as where the provisions of S. 90 of the Code are not complied with,[3] the issue of a proclamation under the section would be illegal.

(b) The Court issuing the proclamation must have reason to believe, or in other words must satisfy itself by evidence or otherwise, that the person against whom the warrant has been issued has absconded or is concealing himself for the purpose of avoiding the execution of the warrant.[4]

3. "Has absconded or is concealing himself".—From the mere fact that a person is absent it should not be readily assumed that he is an absconder without due enquiry and notice.[1] Nor can a person be said to be absconding or concealing himself where he files a petition against the order issuing the warrant and takes steps to procure an order of a Superior Court that he should be allowed to remain on bail after such warrant has been issued.[2] The mere fact that an accused person absconded is not sufficient proof of his guilt.[2-a]

As to the meaning of the word "abscond" as used in S. 172 of the Penal Code see the undermentioned case.[3] As to the power of the Court to proceed in the absence of an absconding accused, see notes under S. 512.

4. "Not less than 30 days from the date of publishing".—The proclamation issued under this section should fix a date not less than thirty days from the date of publication for the appearance of the absconder. Otherwise the proclamation is illegal.[1] The section is imperative in this respect and a non-compliance therewith will render the proclamation and all further proceedings in pursuance thereof null and void.[2] Thus, where the proclamation requiring the absconder to appear on the 11th December, was issued on the 6th November but was actually published in the village only on the 15th November of the same year it was held that the proclamation was wholly illegal and that the further proceedings based thereon were also illegal and liable to be set aside in revision by the High Court.[3]

5. Publication of the proclamation—sub-S. 2.—The requirement as to publication in accordance with clauses (a), (b) and (c) of sub-S. 2 is mandatory and a non-compliance therewith will render the proclamation null and void.[1] It has however been held in the undermentioned case[2] that a non-compliance with clause (c) is only an irregularity curable under S. 537 of the Code. It is submitted that this decision is not correct. There is no reason why this clause should be less imperative than the other clauses, and the decision is opposed to the general trend of view expressed in other decisions.[3]

No presumption under S. 114, Illustration (e) of the Evidence Act can be drawn that the requirements of the section have been duly observed and proclamation published as provided therein.[4] The reason is that the principle applies only to all acts performed by the Court in the exercise of jurisdiction and not to acts which are themselves conditions precedent to the exercise of jurisdiction.[5] "Where it appears in the face of the proceedings that the

6. Statement in writing by Court—sub-S. 3.—It is only where a statement in writing is recorded under Sub-S. 3 that it will be conclusive evidence as to the fulfilment of the requirements of the section. Where there is no such statement on the record and there is nothing to show that the provisions of Sub-S. 2 have been complied with, the proclamation cannot be considered to be in accordance with Law.[1] Similarly, where neither the proclamation nor a copy of it is preserved and the record does not show that all the legal formalities have been complied with, an order of confiscation passed under S. 88 would be illegal and liable to be set aside.[2] The burden of proving that there was due proclamation under this section is upon the prosecution.[3]

Where the validating order under this sub-section is itself defective and does not state that the proclamation has been duly published on a specified date, it cannot be taken to be conclusive evidence of due publication and the Court is not precluded from going behind the order and questioning the legality of the proclamation.[4]

7. Revision.—When the proclamation does not comply with the requirements of the section, it is illegal and the proceedings can be set aside in Revision.[1] But an accused person against whom a proclamation has been issued must, until he has surrendered, be regarded as in contempt and the High Court will not entertain any application on his behalf.[2] Even after surrendering, the proper procedure for the accused is to apply to the Magistrate himself in the first instance and a Revision will lie from the Magistrate's decision on such application.[3]

attachment of property in the jurisdiction of any Magistrate by whom such order is endorsed. The attachment under this section shall, if the property ordered to be attached be land paying revenue to Government, be made through the Collector of the District in which the land is situate, and in all other cases by seizure under the order of the Magistrate or by the appointment of a manager and receiver, or by an order prohibiting the payment of rent to the absent person, as the Magistrate shall deem proper. If the absent person shall not appear within the time specified in the proclamation, the property under attachment shall be declared to be at the disposal of Government, but shall not be sold until the expiration of six calendar months, unless such property is of a perishable nature, or it shall be considered by the Magistrate that the sale would be for the benefit of the owner.

189. If the warrant cannot be served, and the Magistrate is satisfied that the witness absconds or conceals himself for the purpose of avoiding the service thereof, the Magistrate may issue a proclamation, requiring the attendance of such witness to give evidence at a time and place to be named therein, to be affixed on some conspicuous part of his ordinary place of abode, and if such witness shall not attend at the time and place named in such proclamation, the Magistrate may order the attachment of any moveable property belonging to such witness to such amount as he shall deem reasonable, not being in excess of the amount of costs of attachment and of any fine to which such witness may be liable under the provisions of the following section. Such order shall not authorise the attachment of any property out of the jurisdiction of the Magistrate by whom it is made, but it shall authorize the attachment of property in the jurisdiction of any Magistrate by whom such order is endorsed.

1. Legislative Changes:—

(1) The provision relating to the investigation of claims of third parties contained in Clauses 6-A to 6-D are new. In the absence of a similar provision under the old Codes, it was held in the undermentioned cases[1] that criminal Courts could not entertain and enquire into the claims of third parties whose only remedy was to file a separate suit in a Civil Court, and all that the Criminal Courts could do was to stay the sale of the property seized to give the claimants time to establish their rights in a Civil Court. The addition of Clauses 6-A to 6-D, which are drawn up on the model of Order 21, Rules 58 to 63 of the Code of Civil Procedure, empowers the Criminal Courts to entertain and investigate the claims of third parties and also gives effect to the view expressed in the undermentioned case[2] decided before the amendment of 1923. S. 88, Notes 1—4.

(2) The words "at any time" in Clause 1 have been newly added under the present Code. As to the effect of the amendment see Note 3 below.

(3) Under the Code of 1861, the property of the absconder had to be declared to be at the disposal of the Government. No declaration was made necessary under the later Codes.

2. Which Court can order attachment.—It is only the Court issuing the proclamation that is empowered to order an attachment under this section. If the property to be attached is in a District outside that of the Magistrate issuing the order the order must be endorsed by the District Magistrate or Chief Presidency Magistrate within whose jurisdiction the property sought to be attached is situate.[1]

3. Stage at which attachment can be ordered.—Under the Code of 1882 an order for attachment could not be made until after the proclamation under the previous section was issued.[1] Under the present Code, having regard to the altered language of Cl. 1, the Court is empowered to order the attachment at any time. The Court can thus issue a proclamation against an absconding offender under S. 87 and simultaneously order the attachment of his property under this section.[2]

4. Property which can be attached.—The words "order the attachment of any property moveable or immovable" are enabling and not restrictive and the Court can attach both moveable and immovable property at the same time.[1]

Attachment of undivided interest of a coparcener in a joint Hindu family.—It has been decided by a Full Bench of the High Court of Madras[2] that there is nothing in the section to restrict the meaning of the word "property" and that it includes the rights and interests of persons who, as members of an undivided family, are entitled to the property of the family. What has to be attached under the section in such a case is the share of the defaulting member, which is of course subject to the rights of the other members of the family, and may be realized by a Receiver in a suit for partition or otherwise.

The effect of such an attachment is not to sever the interest of the absconder from the date of attachment and vest his share or property in the Government. By attaching his property the Government simply takes the position of the absconder and it is liable to fluctuations by subsequent births in the family. Thus, a son born to the absconder subsequent to the attachment of his share and before sale is entitled to have his share freed from the attachment.[3]

Attachment of ancestral land in the Punjab.—In the case of ancestral land in Punjab, having regard to the customary law prevailing there, all that can be attached in proceedings under this section is the life interest of the absconder. On the death of the absconder the lands attached must be released in favour of his heirs.[4] Hence, a suit by the collaterals after the death of the absconder to recover back the properties from the purchaser at a sale held under this section is competent.[5]

5. Mode of attachment.—Sub-S. 3 prescribes the mode of attachment in the case of moveable property and sub-S. 4 the mode of attachment in the case of immovable property. The doors of a house are part of the furniture and are moveable property, but the frames embedded in the walls or the floor are to be considered immovable property and the action of a police officer executing a warrant of attachment under this section in digging the walls or floors to remove them is not correct and amounts to an irregularity. It has been held that resistance to the officer under such circumstances does not amount to an offence under S. 332, I.P.C.[1]

6. Attachment by Civil Court.—The right, title and interest in the property of the absconder cannot be said to pass on to the Government the moment the absconder fails to appear on the date fixed for his appearance. The words "the property under attachment shall be at the disposal of the Government" in sub-S. 7 show that the property will be at the disposal of the Government only from the date of attachment. Hence, where the actual attachment by the Criminal Court was subsequent to an attachment made by the Civil Court, a sale held in pursuance of the former cannot affect the rights of the attaching decree-holder in the latter Court. Such a sale is also affected by lis pendens.[1] But if, on the other hand, the attachment by the Criminal Court is prior in point of time to that of the Civil Court, the former prevails over the latter.

Subsequently, the same property was attached by B in execution of a money decree against A in a Civil Court and sold on 15—1—1879, B himself being the purchaser. On 21—4—1880, C purchased in a sale held by the Magistrate. Held in a suit for possession by B against C that the title obtained by C under the Magistrate's sale was superior to the title of B.[2] ernment if the absent person did not appear within the time specified in the proclamation and the undermentioned cases[1] laid down the circumstances in which such a declaration should or should not be made. Under the present Code no such declaration is necessary and the property comes under the disposal of the Government: S. 88, Notes 7—9.

(1) if the absentee fails to appear on the specified date and
(2) the property has been attached.

The words "at the disposal of the Government" mean that the properties come under the absolute control of the Government to dispose of or deal with it in whatever manner it may seem most appropriate and convenient.[2] The title of the absconder to the property confiscated is thereafter put an end to and he cannot maintain a suit for possession of the confiscated property unless it be that he has otherwise acquired a title to the property subsequent to the order of confiscation.[3]

The position of the Government in relation to the property attached is not simply that of an attaching decree-holder. It is at least analogous to that of a Receiver in possession and management. The Government has such an interest in the property as to entitle it to remain in possession and is a necessary party under O. 34, R. 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure in a suit brought to enforce a mortgage over the property. If the Government is not impleaded as a party to such a suit, the right of the Government as well as a purchaser from the Government to redeem the mortgage is not lost.[4]

If the proclaimed person appears or is arrested within the time specified in the proclamation, the attachment will cease.[5] [See sub-S. 6-E].

8. Sale of attached property:—Sale of land subject to lease. Where there is an outstanding valid lease in favour of a third person at the time of attachment under this section, and the lessee prefers a claim, the proper order to make is to sell the property subject to the right of the lessee to remain in possession until the expiry of the term of the lease.[1]

9. Setting aside sale.—The Code does not contemplate and contains no provision for sales once held under the section being set aside. Even the High Court, cannot, in the exercise of its powers of Revision, set aside the sale on the ground of any material irregularity or illegality as against the purchaser who is a stranger to the proceedings.[1] It is however open to the absconder to apply under the next following section for the recovery of the net sale proceeds provided the requirements of that section are satisfied.[2]

As to whether a separate civil suit lies to set aside a sale see Note 10 infra.

10. Suit to recover property from auction-purchaser whether lies:—

(a) Suit by the Proclaimed offender.—There is a conflict of judicial opinion as to whether a suit lies at the instance of the proclaimed offender to recover the property sold under the section on the ground that the proclamation and sale were in contravention of the provisions of Ss. 87 and 88. Where the proclamation failed to state the time within which and the place at which the absconder should present himself to avert the sale of the property it was held by the High Court of Allahabad in the undermentioned case[1] that the proclamation was a nullity, the order for sale thereon was illegal that the sale passed no estate whatsoever to the purchaser, and that the property could be recovered in a civil suit. It was also held that S. 89 of the Code applied only to cases where there was a good and legal proclamation and did not bar a suit where the proceedings were without jurisdiction and absolutely null and void.

The High Court of Lahore has, on the other hand, held in the undermentioned case[2] that such a suit is not competent and the same should be held to be impliedly barred under S. 9 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This is based on the reasoning that the legislature does not contemplate a sale once effected being set aside, that Ss. 87 to 89 form a complete Code by themselves and that the remedies provided therein to afford relief to a person who considers himself aggrieved are exclusive and exhaustive subject only to the right of appeal, if any, and the powers that the High Court may exercise in his favour under its revisional and inherent powers under Ss. 435 and 561-A of the Code. The decision, however, seems to proceed on the view that a non-compliance with S. 87 is only an irregularity a view which is not shared by other High Courts and even by the same High Court in other cases.[3] If the decision be taken to have laid down that even in cases of want of jurisdiction there is no remedy by way of a civil suit, it is submitted that it cannot be accepted as correct. The general principle of law is that it is only where a court acting under the powers conferred by a special enactment exercises powers in conformity with the provisions that its acts may not be liable to challenge in Civil Courts. They do not enjoy a similar immunity when they can

(b) Suit by third parties.—If third persons, i.e., persons other than the absconder claim to have any interest in the property which is not liable to attachment, it is open to them to prefer a claim under the section within six months from the date of attachment. If the claim is disallowed, the section provides that a suit can be filed within a year from the date of dismissal of the claim. The remedy of preferring a claim under the section is not however exclusive but merely permissive and on the principle of the decision of the Judicial Committee in Kanhya Lal v. The National Bank (I.L.R. 40 Cal. 598) a case decided under the Code of Civil Procedure, a third person is not bound to prefer a claim but he can straightaway file a suit to set aside the sale proceedings. If the property has been declared to be at the disposal of the Government, he is entitled to maintain a suit against the Government and the latter is also responsible for mesne profits for the period during which the property was at its disposal especially in a case where in spite of notice the Government did not repudiate its connection with the property.[5]

(1) He appears either voluntarily or is apprehended and brought before the Court within 2 years from the date of attachment and

(2) He satisfies the Court that

Provided these conditions are satisfied, he is entitled to a restoration of the property attached, where it has not been sold, or to the net sale proceeds if the property has already been sold.[2] There is a conflict of opinion as to whether the illegality of the proclamation is a ground for an application under this section. According to the High Court of Allahabad[3] and the undermentioned cases of Lahore High Court[4] this section prescribes a remedy where there is a good and legal proclamation but affords no facility for contesting the legality of the proclamation. A different view, however, has been taken by the Lahore High Court in the case cited below[5] according to which an application under this section will lie on the ground that the proclamation did not comply with the provisions of law. It is submitted that the latter view is not correct. The grounds and conditions for an application under this section are specified in the section and these do not include the illegality of the proclamation. There is no principle by which a ground not specified in the section can be assumed to be included in it.

If the witness shall pay to the Magistrate the costs and fine as aforesaid, the Magistrate shall order the property to be released from attachment.

Independent of this section, however, the High Court can in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction, go into the question of the legality of the proclamation and do any of the following things:—

(1) Where the property has not been sold, it may set aside the attachment and order restoration of the property to the applicant.

(2) Where the property has been sold it may order the delivery of the net sale proceeds to the applicant.[6] The High Court can also under its inherent powers order the attachment to be raised and the property restored in proper cases.[7]

Where the attached property has been sold, the applicant for restoration is only entitled to the sale proceeds.[8]

As to whether a suit will lie against the purchaser for restoration of the property on the ground of the illegality of the proclamation see S. 88, Note 10.

2. "Within two years from the date of the attachment".—The words "within two years from the date of the attachment" qualify not only the word "appears" but also the word "proves" which is connected with the word "appears" by the conjunction "and".[1] It is therefore not sufficient that the absconder should merely appear before the Court within the period of two years. He should also "prove" to the satisfaction of the Court within the said period that he did not abscond or conceal himself and that he had no notice of the proclamation.[2] It has been held in the undermentioned case[3] that even if the absconder appears and applies under this section within two years of the attachment the conditions of the section are not satisfied unless he also actually proves within the period that he did not abscond and did not know of the proclamation. It is submitted that this is not correct. The section does not refer to any application, but the word "proof" in the section must be taken to include an offer to prove i.e., an application under the section.[4] To expect the absconder not only to apply but also to prove the matters alleged within the specified period would be to make him responsible for any delay that may be caused by the Court in posting the matter for enquiry. S. 89, Notes 2–3.

Where no application is made under this section within two years from the date of the attachment, it has been held that the High Court has no inherent power under S. 561-A to order restoration. The proper remedy in such a case is to apply to the Government.[5] Where property is forfeited to the Government, it can re-grant it to any one it thinks fit.[6]

3. Who can apply under the section.—The fact that the person whose property has been attached did not abscond or conceal himself or that he did not know of the proclamation is a matter particularly within his own knowledge and the section therefore requires that he should himself appear and prove such allegations, even if an application is made on his behalf under this section.[1]

CHAPTER XV.

Of Cases triable by The Magistrate in which A Summons on complaint shall ordnarily Issue.

257. Whenever a complaint is made before a Magistrate having jurisdiction in the case, that any person has committed or is suspected to have committed any offence triable by such Magistrate and punishable under the Indian Penal Code with imprisonment for a period not exceeding six months, it shall be lawful for such Magistrate to issue his summons directed to such person, stating shortly the matter of such complaint, and requiring him to appear at a certain time and place before such Magistrate to answer to the complaint.

Summons shall issue.

Provided that, if the Magistrate shall be satisfied or have reason to believe that the accused person is about to abscond, he may, instead of issuing a summons, issue his warrant in the first instance for the arrest of such accused person.

When warrant may issue.

260. If the person served with a summons shall not appear before the Magistrate at the time mentioned in such summons, and the Magistrate shall be satisfied that such summons was duly served in what shall be deemed by the Magistrate to be a reasonable time before the time therein appointed for appearing to the same, or if it shall appear to the Magistrate that after due diligence the summons could not be served according to the provisions of this Act, the Magistrate may issue his warrant to apprehend the accused person.

If summons be not obeyed, warrant.

285. If the person summoned shall not attend on the day appointed, the Magistrate or other officer as aforesaid, if satisfied that the summons has been duly served, may issue a warrant for his arrest. Provided that, whenever it shall appear to the Magistrate or other officer as aforesaid, upon the report of a police officer or upon other credible information, the substance of which report of information shall be recorded, that there is just reason to fear the commission of a breach of the peace, which may probably be prevented by the immediate arrest of any person, it shall be lawful for the Magistrate at any time to issue a warrant for the arrest of such person.

Warrant of arrest.

in Clauses (a) and (b) of the section issue a warrant of arrest. Where, the Court has no power to issue a summons at all, it cannot, under this section, issue a warrant of arrest. Thus, where an accused has been discharged under S. 253 of the Code by a Subordinate Magistrate, the District Magistrate cannot issue a warrant for his arrest. The reason is that he has no power to issue a summons to the accused while the order of discharge remains in force.[1] Similarly, the Court cannot issue a warrant under this section for the arrest and appearance of a witness before a police-officer investigating a case inasmuch as the Code does not authorise the Court to issue a summons for the appearance of a witness before a police-officer.[2] On the same principle, it has been held that the Court cannot issue a warrant of arrest against a party who fails to appear in pursuance of an order passed under S. 145, Cl. 1 of the Code.[3]

2. "May. . . . issue a warrant for his arrest".—This section does not authorise a Court to issue warrants by wholesale without discrimination in lieu of summonses.[1] The section gives only a discretion to the Court to issue a warrant of arrest and such discretion should be exercised judicially upon a consideration of the materials before the Court which would justify the conclusion that the person against whom the warrant is sought to be issued will either not obey the summonses or is keeping out of the way to evade service of summons or that he has, after being duly served, deliberately disobeyed it. Where the discretion is improperly exercised and none of the conditions contained in Cl. (a) or Cl. (b) are present, the issue of a warrant is illegal.[2] Thus the Court, ought not in a case under S. 498 of the Penal Code straightway without issuing a summons issue a warrant of arrest to procure the appearance of the complainant's wife as a witness.[3] Where summons has been served and the summoned person does not appear, the Court must be satisfied that the summons has been duly served in good time before issuing a warrant for his arrest. The report of a police-station writer, it has been held, is not admissible as evidence of due service under Cl. (b).[4]

A person is not justified in absenting himself in response to a summons on the ground that he has sent a telegram intimating to the Court through his Mooktear that the High Court has stayed further proceedings in the matter. The Court will be justified in issuing a warrant for arrest in such a case.[5]

A witness arrested under a warrant and brought before a Magistrate should not be treated as criminals, but should be enlarged on bail.[6]

3. "After recording its reasons in writing".—There is a conflict of judicial opinion as to whether the provision in the section requiring the Court to record its reasons in writing before issuing a warrant of arrest is mandatory or is merely directory, and as to whether an omission to do so is an illegality which would vitiate the warrant or is a mere irregularity which is cured by the provisions of S. 537 of the Code. On the one hand, it has been held by the High Court of Madras[1] and the Chief Court of Punjab[2] that the recording of reasons in writing is a necessary preliminary to the exercise of jurisdiction under the section and the failure to do so vitiates the warrant. The High Court of Allahabad[3] and a Full Bench of the High Court of Calcutta[4] have, on the other hand, held that an omission to record reasons in writing amounts only to a violation of a directory provision and is a mere irregularity which can be cured by S. 537.

to take recognizances from witnesses to appear before himself for an adjourned date.[1] Under the present section it is clear that the Court may require any person present in Court,

(1) for whose appearance it can issue a summons or

(2) for whose arrest it can issue a warrant to execute a bond for his appearance before the Court. Thus a bond for appearance may be taken from an accused person charged with an offence[2] or from a witness. In the undermentioned case[3] it was held that a bond may be taken under this section even from a Mukhtear for the appearance of a witness.

This section, however, deals only with the power to require persons to execute bonds for appearance before the Court taking the bond. But there are other provisions in the Code enabling one Magistrate to take a bond from a person for appearance before another Court.[4] See Ss. 86 ante and 217 infra.

2. With or without sureties.—It is in the discretion of the Court to require a person to execute a bond for appearance with or without sureties. In the case of a witness who is not in any way disinclined to appear when called for by the Magistrate, an ordinary recognisance is enough and he should not be called upon to furnish bail for his appearance.[1]

3. Verbal order for appearance.—A verbal order given to a witness by a Court, to attend on a particular day is a valid order, the disobedience of which will be an offence punishable under S. 174 of the Penal Code.[1]

1. Legislative Changes.—The words "or any parcel or thing" in sub-S. 3 were newly added in the Code of 1898.

2. Scope of the section.—Chapter VI ante deals with processes to compel the personal attendance of persons before the Court. This chapter deals with processes to compel the production of documents or things before the Court or a police-officer. In order, however, to compel the production of a document or thing before a Court or a police-officer, it is essential that such production is considered necessary or desirable for the purpose of any investigation, inquiry, trial or other proceeding under the Code by or before such court or officer.[1-a] But it is not necessary that such investigation, inquiry, trial or other proceeding should be pending before such court or officer at the time the process for production is issued. It may be issued even before proceedings of any kind are initiated and in view of an enquiry 'about to be made' by him under the Code.[1]

S. 257 infra, which provides that an accused person is entitled at the particular stage mentioned therein to apply to the Court to call for the production of any document or thing, does not control or limit the power of the Court to exercise its discretion in using the machinery provided by this section.[2] This discretion given by this section may be exercised in a trial under the provisions of Chapter 21 before the trial has reached the stage indicated by S. 257, infra.[3]

3. "Court"—meaning of.—See Note 3, to S. 96.

4. "Document or thing".—The words 'document or thing' are general and cover every document or thing provided the production and inspection thereof are considered necessary or desirable or will serve the ends of justice in any investigation, inquiry, trial or other proceeding before a court or police-officer.[1] In H. H. the Nizam of Hyderabad v. Jacob,[2] Ameer Ali J., observed as follows:—

"Having regard to the words of the section, it seems to me a Magistrate has the power of calling upon any person to produce any document or thing in that person's possession or power which has any connection with the offence which happens to be under investigation or enquiry. Of course he cannot call for anything and everything from anybody and everybody. The thing called for must have some relation to, or connection with, the subject matter of the investigation or inquiry or throw some light on the proceeding or supply some link in the chain of evidence".

Thus, the words "document or thing" will include not only documents or things which form the subject of the offence under investigation but also those which are or can be used as evidence in support of the prosecution.[3]

See also Note 7 under S. 96 infra. For definition of term 'document' see S. 3, Clause 16, General Clauses Act (Act X of 1897) and S. 3, Indian Evidence Act.

5. Effect of converting the thing the subject matter of an offence, into cash.—A was paid 1,70,000 rupees in 17 notes of Rs. 10,000 each. In respect of these notes A was accused of criminal breach of trust. The accused thereafter cashed 5 of these notes through a third party. On an application under this section against the accused and the third person for the production of this amount, it was held that if the proceeds could be reasonably connected with the subject matter of the charge, the Magistrate has power to order their production in Court.[1]

6. Is necessary or desirable.—The question whether the production of a document or thing is necessary or desirable is one to be decided by the Court before issuing the summons.[1] It may be that the document or thing called for, may turn out to be wholly irrelevant to the inquiry but so long as it is considered necessary or desirable for the purposes of the inquiry, the power is there.[2]

7. "Such Court".—It is only the Court or the police-officer before which or whom an investigation, inquiry, trial or other proceeding is pending or is about to take place that is competent to issue a summons under this section. Therefore, a Magistrate, cannot on a telegram from another Magistrate requesting him to seize certain books of account of a person in the jurisdiction of the former issue a summons for their production before himself.[1]

8. "May issue summons".—The word "may" indicates that the issue of a summons under this section is in the discretion of the Court. The discretion is to be exercised judicially in the sense that, in determining whether the production of a particular document or thing is necessary or desirable, the Court has to satisfy itself that the document or thing has a bearing upon, and is relevant to the case.[1]

9. To whom summons or order should be issued.—The words of the section are of the widest possible character. Any person in whose possession or power a document or other thing which the Court considers necessary or desirable is, may be summoned to produce it.[1] It is not necessary that such person should be a party to the proceedings.[2] Thus the Court can make an order for discovery against a person suspected though not accused of an offence[2-a] or against a third party such as a solicitor[3] or against the police.[4]

10. Where the document or thing is in the possession of an accused person.—The word "person" in this section includes accused persons also.[1] An order for production under this section can therefore be made against such persons also[2] and this can be done notwithstanding that such production might tend to incriminate them.[3]

11. Person having a lien on the thing ordered to be produced.—The mere fact that the person in possession of the articles ordered to be produced, has a lien over them, does not affect the power of the Court to order their production and is not a sufficient reason for their non-production.[1]

12. Summons or order to attend and produce.—In making an order for production the Magistrate must exercise a judicial discretion and he should not make such an order unless there are materials before him to justify his doing so.[1-a] The summons should not be general in terms but distinctly specify the particulars of the documents or thing called for.[1]

13. Person summoned if a witness.—A person summoned merely to produce a document or thing may cause it to be produced instead of himself attending the Court personally. Even when the person summoned merely to produce a document or thing appears in Court for its production, he does not thereby become a witness and he cannot be cross-examined unless and until he is cited as witness in the proceedings. See S. 139 of the Evidence Act.

14. Seizure of account books by the police.—A Magistrate on taking cognizance of a complaint, may if he thinks that any account books forming the subject matter of the charge, are necessary or desirable for the purposes of an enquiry or trial thereon, issue a summons for their production under this section but he is not competent to pass an order directing the police to take possession of the same.[1]

15. Inspection of things or documents produced.—The jurisdiction of the Court to order the production of a document or thing carries with it the jurisdiction to allow the parties to inspect the documents or things produced[1]; but the inspection must be made in Court after their production and not in any other place. Thus where the accused kept his account books in his Solicitor's office, the Magistrate cannot make an order for inspection thereof in the Solicitor's office. They must first be produced in Court.[2] The inspection ought to be made in the presence of the person producing the document or thing and the Magistrate should give definite instructions as to where and when the inspection is to be held and by which officer.[3]

16. Documents produced, if can be compelled to be put in evidence.—S. 163 of the Evidence Act enacts as follows:—"When a party calls for a document which he has given the other party notice to produce, and such document is produced and inspected by the party calling for its production, he is bound to give it as evidence if the party producing it requires him to do so."

It has been held in the case cited below[1] that this rule does not apply to criminal proceedings the reason being that the Civil Procedure Code makes specific provision for inspection of documents of the opposite party under certain circumstances, while the Criminal Procedure Code is silent on the matter. It has accordingly been held that when the accused is summoned to produce a document under this section and the same is inspected by the prosecution the accused cannot insist upon the prosecution putting it in evidence and that it is for the prosecution to determine whether it is to be put in evidence or not.

17. Security for production.—The section does not enable a court to demand security for the production of the articles, when required. The Court can only issue a summons for their production in Court.[1]

18. Ss. 123 and 124, Evidence Act.—The sections referred to, are as follows:—

Section 123.—No one shall be permitted to give any evidence derived from unpublished official records relating to any affairs of State, except with the permission of the officer at the head of the department concerned, who shall give or withhold such permission as he thinks fit.

Section 124.—No public officer shall be compelled to disclose communications made to him in official confidence, when he considers that the public interests would suffer by the disclosure.

19. "Parcel or thing"—in custody of Postal or Telegraph authorities.—The words "or any parcel or thing" are new. As to the production of any letter or postcard, telegram or other document or any parcel or thing in the custody of the postal or telegraph authorities, see S. 95 infra.

20. Form of summons—Summons to produce public records.—See Rules framed by the various High Courts under S. 554 of the Code. According to the Rules of the Bombay High Court a Magistrate requiring the production in evidence of documents recorded in a Court of Justice or in the custody of any public officer, should in his communication to such Court or officer state clearly whether he requires the entire records or any particular paper or papers; also at what time and place the papers, if not previously sent by post, must be produced and whether any Subordinate officer will be required to attend for the purpose of proving them. The communication should be signed and sealed in the same way as a summons. As a rule it is not desirable that a Magistrate should send for the original papers in which copies will serve the purpose and in which the person requiring the production of the papers is in a position to obtain certified copies[1] (Bom. H. C. Cir. Orders 1931, Page 38, S. 43.).

21. Effect of non-compliance with an order under the section.—If the summons under this section is not complied with, a search warrant may be issued under S. 96.[1] Failure to attend and produce the document or thing summoned for, is punishable under S. 175 of the Penal Code. But where a summons is issued without the Court considering it necessary or desirable for the purposes of any investigation, trial or other proceeding, it is illegal and a disobedience thereof is not punishable under S. 175 of the Penal Code.[2]

22. Revision.—The High Court has ample powers under Ss. 435 and 439 to interfere in revision where a Magistrate has either refused to exercise a discretion vested in him by law or has exercised that discretion in an improper

1. Legislative History.—There was no provision in the Code of 1861 corresponding to this section. The second paragraph of S. 369 of the Code of 1872 provided for the causing of a search and the delivery of, any letter in the custody of the postal department. There was a similar provision in S. 146 of Act IV of 1877 which applied to the Presidency towns to which the Code of 1872 did not apply.

Difference between the Codes of 1872 and 1882.—The Code of 1882 enacted the provisions of S. 369, Cl. 2 of the Code of 1872 and S. 146 of Act IV of 1877, in S. 95 with the following material changes.

(1) The word "document" was substituted for the word "letter" so as to include letter, post card, telegram or any other document.

(2) The words "investigation inquiry, trial or other proceeding" for the words "criminal inquiry" is consequent on a similar change in S. 94 supra.

(3) The High Court and the Court of Session were newly invested with power to act under this section.

OF SEARCH-WARRANT.

When grantable by a Magistrate.

114. When a Magistrate shall consider that the production of anything is essential to the conduct of an enquiry into an offence known or suspected to have been committed, he may grant his warrant to search for such thing; and it shall be lawful for the officer charged with the execution of such warrant to search for such thing in any house or place within the jurisdiction of such Magistrate.

1. Legislative Changes.—

Difference with reference to the Code of 1882.—The words "Parcel or other thing" in the last paragraph of the section are new.

(1) Under S. 366 of the Code of 1872, a search warrant could be issued in respect of a document only where a summons has actually been issued for its production. Under this section it may be issued if the Court has reason to believe that a person who might be addressed would not produce the document.

(2) Under S. 368 of the Code of 1872, a search warrant in respect of a thing could be issued only where the Magistrate considers it necessary for an enquiry into an offence known or suspected to have been committed. Under the present section read with Ss. 94 and 95 it may be issued where it is considered necessary for the conduct of any enquiry, trial, or other proceeding under the Code.

2. Scope of the section—

The following are some of the other provisions of the Code relating to searches:—

(1) Ss. 47 to 50—Search of place entered by persons sought to be arrested.

(2) Ss. 51 and 52—Search of arrested persons.

(3) S. 98—Search for stolen property, forged documents, etc.

(4) S. 99-A—Search of certain forfeited publications.

(5) S. 100—Search of persons wrongfully confined.

(6) S. 105—Search in the presence of a Magistrate in cases in which the latter can issue a search warrant.

(7) S. 165—Search by police officers.

This section deals with the issue of search warrants by a Court for the search for a document or thing required for the purposes of any investigation, enquiry or trial (for the production of which an order may be made under Ss. 94 or 95 ante) or for making a general search. Thus the first two clauses of sub-S. 1, relate back to and are governed by the provisions of Ss. 94 and 95

ante,[1] but the third clause which provides for a general search is independent of those sections.[2] A search warrant under this section can be issued only when the Court has reason to believe

(1) that the person who is or might be summoned or requisitioned to produce a document under Ss. 94 and 95 ante will not or would not produce it or

(2) that the document or thing is not known to be in the possession of any person or

(3) that a general inspection or search is necessary.

3. "Court".—For the sake of brevity the Code uses the terms "Court" and "Magistrate" generally, if not always, as convertible terms.[1] In other words a Magistrate acting judicially is a Court within the meaning of the Code.[2] It has been held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that it is not necessary that in order that action may be taken under this section, there should be any proceedings pending before such Magistrate, and that Schedule V, Form 8 shows that a search warrant may be issued before proceedings of any kind are initiated and in view of an enquiry about to be made.[3] In view of this decision the undermentioned cases[4] holding a contrary view are no longer law.

4. "Has reason to believe".—The act of issuing a search warrant is a judicial act[1-a] and therefore, before issuing it, the Magistrate is bound to apply his mind to the facts and weigh the circumstances and then make up his mind on the question.[1] A mere statement in an affidavit that, in the opinion of the deponent, a summons may not have the desired effect[2] or a mere statement by a police-officer that it is necessary to issue a search warrant[3] is not sufficient to justify the issue of a search warrant. As has been seen in Note 2 ante it is a condition precedent to the issue of a search warrant under this section that one or other of the circumstances mentioned in the section should exist.[4] In the absence of any such circumstances, the issue of a search warrant would be illegal.[5]

5. Record of reasons.—There is no express provision requiring the Magistrate to make a record or keep notes of the materials upon which he has acted in issuing a search warrant under this section. But it is necessary that some such record ought to be kept to enable the High Court to form an opinion as regards the materials upon which the Magistrate has acted.[1]

6. 'Person' if would include an accused person.—Reading this section with S. 94 ante, it will be clear that the word 'person' in this section will include accused persons also.[1] A search warrant can therefore be issued against an accused person also if the circumstances specified in the section exist.[2]

7. "Document or thing".—See note 4 to S. 94 ante. These words are general and when the premises to be searched are those of an accused person, the warrant need not be only for the finding of the document, etc., in respect of which the alleged offence has been committed and may be for any document or thing, the production and inspection of which are necessary and desirable or will serve the ends of justice.[1-a] A woman is not a "thing" within the meaning of this section.[1] It has also been held in a case under S. 165 of the Code that the word "thing" would not include the configuration of a wall or any place inside a house.[2]

8. Document etc., in the custody of Postal or Telegraph authorities.—It is only the District Magistrate in the moffussil and the Chief Presidency Magistrate in the Presidency Towns that can issue a search warrant under this section for a document or thing in the custody of Postal or Telegraph authorities. If any other Magistrate issues such a search warrant, his proceedings are void under S. 530, Cl. (b).

9. General search or inspection.—There was no provision for the issue of a general search warrant under the Code of 1861. A search warrant could be issued under that Code only for a specified and particular thing.[1] Under this section, however, there is a specific provision in the third clause of sub-S. 1 permitting the issue of such a warrant. A search may now be instituted on the chance of finding something which may prove useful in the case.[1-a] But a general search warrant can only be issued if the Court considers that the purposes of any enquiry, trial or other proceeding under the Code would be served by such search.[1-b] Such a proceeding need not, however, be actually pending at the time of issuing the warrant. A warrant may be issued for the purposes of an enquiry about to be made.[1-c]

In Form 8, of Schedule V no doubt the words "Specify clearly" occur, but the forms in the schedule are to be used only with such variation as the circumstances of the case may require.[2] It has, however, been held in the undermentioned case[3] that a search warrant is intended for use only in respect of definite documents believed to exist which must be clearly specified in the warrant. The decision does not refer to the third clause of sub-S. 1 of the section and is against the plain wording thereof. It is submitted that it cannot be accepted as correct.

10. 'May' issue a search warrant.—The word 'may' indicates that the issue of a search warrant under this section is in the discretion of the Court. In exercising this discretion, it is the duty of the Court, in the first instance to consider if a summons to produce would not have the desired effect. The Court should remember that it is a grave step to issue a search warrant directing that a man's house should be invaded and searched, and that such power should not be exercised without full appreciation of the gravity of the step and without coming to the conclusion that it is really necessary in the ends of justice. Where a search warrant is sought to be issued on the basis of any information furnished to the Magistrate the Court should if possible examine the informant on oath and if such examination is not possible the Court should act with due appreciation of the fact that it is taking upon itself the responsibility of considering the weight of the information as information preparatory to issuing an order of a very serious nature. Where the order is sought to be made on the basis of a complaint, the complainant should be examined on oath under S. 200 infra before issuing the order.[1] A mere statement of counsel on behalf of a prosecuting complainant[2] or a mere application by the police based on a telegram received by them[3] should not be treated as information on which a Magistrate is entitled to act. But it is not necessary, where action is taken on a complaint, that the Magistrate should wait until a preliminary enquiry is held and all the witnesses for the prosecution are examined and cross-examined.[4] Sometimes a delay in issuing the warant may tend to defeat the purpose for which the warrant is issued. In such cases it should be issued as early as possible. Where, in a case of theft, an application was made for the issue of a search warrant with the object of securing for the purpose of the trial, identification of the property and to ascertain whether it was really in the possession of the accused, it was held that a delay of three weeks in the issue of the warrant was not proper.[5]

11. Who may issue warrant.—All Magistrates including a third class Magistrate are empowered to issue search warrants under this section.[1]

12. Seizure without search warrant.—An Order calling upon the police to take possession of account books in the possession of a certain person without issuing a search warrant is illegal.[1]

When properties not mentioned in the warrant have also been seized and produced before the Court, they cannot be considered to be property before the Court.[2]

13. Search warrants for the purposes of attachment.—When property not alleged to be stolen, is in the hands of third parties a search warrant for their production can only be for the purposes of evidence and ought not to be granted for the sole purpose of attaching property the title to which is in dispute.[1]

14. Search warrant under Special or local Laws.—There are some Special and Local Acts empowering the issue of search warrants under specified circumstances, to which the provisions of this Code relating to searches apply. These may be classified under two heads viz.,

(1) Where the Acts themselves provide for the adoption, of the procedure laid down in this Code and

(2) Where the Acts make no such provision but where the procedure under this Code has been held to apply to searches under this Act.

It was held in the undermentioned case[7] that S. 5 of the Gambling Act provides for a special procedure for searches and consequently, under S. 5 of the Code, the provisions of the Code as regards searches will not apply. See also the undermentioned Acts and cases.[8]

15. Search for persons in wrongful confinement.—See S. 100 infra.

16. Search under the Indian Arms Act.—See S. 25 of the Indian Arms Act (Act XI of 1878). As a preliminary condition to the exercise of the power of a Magistrate to cause a search to be made under that section, it is necessary for the Magistrate to record his grounds of belief that arms are kept for an unlawful purpose. If this condition is not complied with the search under that would be illegal.[1] A Magistrate issuing a search warrant under S. 25 of the Arms Act must be taken to be acting as a Court.[2]

17. Search warrant when may be executed.—This section does not require that a search under this section should be made only by day light. But in view of the advantages of searching by day light whenever possible, the rules and regulations framed under S. 12 of the Indian Police Act (V of 1861) in the various provinces have prescribed that as far as possible searches after dark should be avoided.[1]

18. Security for production.—As has been seen in Note 17 to S. 94 that section does not enable a Court to demand security for the production of the article when required. This section also does not enable the Court to demand such security.[1] However, when once it has acted under this section and a search warrant has been issued, the Court can stay execution of the warrant conditionally on the execution of the bond by such person for production of the articles in Court whenever called upon.[2]

19. Inspection.—Having regard to the language of S. 97, the word "inspect" in Cl. 3 of the section applies only to a locality or place but not to a document or other thing.[1] But the right of seizure of documents or things implies and carries with it the right of inspection.[2] The documents or things must however be brought to the Court before they are allowed to be inspected,[3] and inspection should be allowed in Court or where and when the Court orders and in the presence of the person concerned,[4] and not at the office of the pleaders of the accused.[5] The inspection must be limited to the books etc., named in the search warrant and cannot be had of other books etc., seized under it.[6]

20. Power to search includes power to take into possession.—There is no express mention in this section or anywhere in the Code that the person to whom the search warrant is directed can seize and take possession of the thing found on search. But an examination of Ss. 94 to 96 and of S. 165 infra and the form of the search warrant, make it clear that the intention of the law is that the power to search includes the power to take into possession.[1]

21. Power to invoke aid in reading documents.—A Criminal Court has the power not only to seize and have produced before it any document etc., but also to invoke the aid of persons capable of helping it to read and understand the contents of the document, books etc., so produced.[1]

22. Form of search warrant.—See Sch. V, Form No. 8 infra.

23. Who may make the search.—S. 101 of the Code makes the provisions of S. 77 ante applicable to search warrants also. Under the latter section a warrant should ordinarily be directed to one or more police officers, and, when issued by a Presidency Magistrate should always be so directed; but any other Court issuing such a warrant, may, if its immediate execution is necessary and no police officer is immediately available, direct it to any other person or persons. A warrant to a Collectorate Nazir where a police officer was available is illegal.[1] It is the person directed by the warrant, whether a police officer or otherwise, that should himself conduct the search, except as provided in S. 79 supra which authorises one police-officer to direct another police-officer whose name is endorsed on the warrant to execute the warrant.

As to the competency of Magistrates to conduct the search in person see Note 24 infra.

24. Magistrate, if can search himself.—A Magistrate who is competent to issue a search warrant is also competent to conduct the search himself or in his presence.[1] See Note 105 infra.

25. Other than a District Magistrate.—See Note 8 supra.

26. Illegality of warrant or search.—As to the effect of an illegality or irregularity in the search, on the trial itself, See S. 537 infra.

27. Resistance to illegal search.—There is a conflict of opinion as to whether and when a resistance to an illegal search is illegal. According to the Bombay High Court[1] and the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court[2] and the Chief Court of Punjab[2-a] a resistance even to an illegal search is not justified if the officer was acting in good faith under colour of his office within the meaning of S. 99 of the Penal Code. The High Court of Allahabad seems also to be inclined to the same view.[3] On the other hand, the High Court of Calcutta has held that a resistance to an unauthorised search is justified.[4]

According to that Court the words "not strictly justifiable by Law" in S. 97 of the Penal Code point to cases where there is an excess of jurisdiction as distinct from a complete absence of jurisdiction, to cases where the official has done wrongly what he might have done rightly, not to cases where the act could not possibly have been done rightly.[5] Where a process issued under S. 100 was drawn up in the form prescribed for a warrant under S. 96[6] or under S. 98[7] with the necessary alterations it was held that there was only a defect in form and not in substance and that a resistance to such search is not justified. Similarly when an officer who had under the Abkari Act the power to make a search after recording reasons makes the search without making such record, a resistance thereto was held not to be justified.[8] S. 96, Notes 27—29.

29. Revision.—Unless an order for the issue of a search warrant is either illegal or vitiated by material irregularity the High Court will not interfere in revision and prevent the collection of material evidence in the interests of justice.[1]

1. Legislative History—

Difference between the Codes of 1861 and 1872.—The provisions of this section formed part of S. 114 of the Code of 1861 and was contained in para. 2 of S. 368 of the Code of 1872. The words "If he thinks fit", "or inspection" and "and the officer charged. . . . so specified" were newly introduced in the Code of 1872.

Difference between the Codes of 1872 and 1882.—The Code of 1882 enacted this provision under a separate S. 97 which made two changes only.

(1) The word "Court" was substituted for the word "Magistrate" used in both the previous Codes, in order to conform to a similar change in S. 96.

(2) The word 'House' used in both the previous Codes was omitted, presumably because it is included in the word 'place'.

Code of 1898.—The section remains the same in the Code of 1882.

2. Scope.—In the absence of the words "if it thinks fit" in S. 114 of the Code of 1861 it was held under that Code that the place to be searched must be specified in the warrant, and that a direction to search any house the officer thinks fit, rendered the warrant illegal.[1] This is no longer law in view of the words "if it thinks fit" in the present section.

1. Legislative History—

Difference between the Codes of 1872 and 1882.—The provisions of both S. 377 of the Code of 1872 and S. 160 of Act IV of 1877 were enacted in S. 98 of the Code of 1882 with the following changes:

(1) The word 'house' occurring in both the previous Codes was omitted as being included in the word 'place'.

Search of house, etc., suspected to contain forged documents, &c.

127. If the Magistrate of the District or a Magistrate in charge of a division of a District, upon information and after such enquiry as he may think necessary, has reason to believe that any house or other place is used as a place for the deposit or sale of stolen property, or for the deposit or sale or manufacture of forged documents or counterfeit Government stamps or counterfeit coin, or instruments or materials for counterfeiting coin or for forging, or that any forged documents or counterfeit stamps or false seals or any counterfeit coin or instruments or materials used for counterfeiting coin, or for forging, are kept or deposited in any house or other place, he may by his warrant authorize any police officer above the rank of a constable, peon, or burkundaz to enter, with such assistance as may be required, and by force if necessary, any such house or other place, and to search all such parts of the same as shall be specified in the warrant, and to seize and take possession of any stolen property, documents, stamps, seals, or coins therein found which he may reasonably suspect to be forged, stolen, false, or counterfeit, and also of any such instruments and materials as aforesaid.

(2) Clauses (d) and (e) were taken from S. 160 of Act IV of 1877 and added to the section. S. 98, Notes 1—8.

Difference between the Codes of 1882 and 1898.—Sub-S. 2 of the section was new.

Changes in 1925.—The additions to the section in the fourth para. of sub-S. 1 and in Clauses (c), (d) and (e) relating to "obscene objects" were made by the Obscene Publications Act VIII of 1925.

2. Procedure under the Section.—Under S. 101 the provisions of Ss. 43, 75, 77, 79, 82, 83 and 84 ante apply so far as may be to all searches under this section.

3. Who can issue a warrant under the section.—The section specifies the Magistrates that can issue a warrant under the section. A Magistrate not so specified cannot act under the section. Where, however, he does erroneously issue a warrant under the section in good faith, his proceedings will not be set aside merely on the ground of his not being empowered to do so. See S. 529 infra.

4. "Upon information and after such inquiry as he thinks necessary".—The pendency of any proceeding before the Magistrate is not a condition precedent to the issue of a search warrant.[1] The Magistrate can issue a warrant upon mere information and after such inquiry as he thinks necessary. When the Magistrate "is about to issue a search warrant on the strength of information as distinguished from a complaint, he should, if possible examine the informant on oath, and if evidence cannot be taken on oath, he should act with a due appreciation of the fact that he is taking upon himself the responsibility of considering the weight of the information, as information preparatory to issuing an order of a very serious nature".[2]

5. "By warrant authorise".—See Notes 6 to 11 below.

6. Form of warrant.—See Schedule V, Form No. 9.

7. Use of form under this section, for warrant under another section.—Where a form under this section is used for a warrant under S. 100 with necessary alterations, the defeat is only one of form and not in substance and a resistance to such a warrant is not justified.[1]

8. Who may make the search.—S. 101 infra makes the provisions of Ss. 77 and 79 ante apply so far as may be to this section. Under this section a warrant can be issued only to a police officer above the rank of a constable and it is only such officer that can conduct the search. But under S. 79 referred to above, a warrant issued under this section can be endorsed over to any other police officer of the same rank for execution.[1]

A Magistrate who is competent to issue a warrant under this section is also competent to conduct the search himself or in his presence under S. 105 infra.

9. Execution of warrant outside jurisdiction.—If search, under this section is required to be made at a place outside the local jurisdiction of the Magistrate issuing the warrant, proceedings should be taken in accordance with S. 84 supra which are made applicable to this section by S. 101.

10. Search without warrant.—A search under this section made without a search warrant is illegal.[1] But a police officer, investigating a charge of theft, is entitled under S. 165 infra to search without a warrant, and such a search will not be illegal.[2]

A warrant illegally issued under S. 96 cannot be treated as valid under this section. S. 537 does not cure such a defect.[3] See Note 27 to S. 96 supra.

11. "Stolen property", "Forged Document", "Counterfeit" "Coin".—The expressions mentioned above are defined as under, in the Penal Code and those definitions apply by virtue of S. 4, sub-S. 2 to this Code also.

"Stolen Property".—S. 410, Penal Code.—"Property, the possession whereof has been transferred by theft, or by extortion, or by robbery, and property which has been criminally misappropriated or in respect of which criminal breach of trust has been committed, is designated "Stolen property" whether the transfer has been made, or the misappropriation or breach of trust has been committed, within or without British India. But, if such property subsequently comes into the possession of a person legally entitled to the possession thereof, it then ceases to be stolen property".

"Forged Documents".—S. 470, Penal Code. "A false document made wholly or in part by forgery is designated "a forged document".

"Counterfeit".—S. 28, Penal Code. A person is said to "counterfeit" who causes one thing to resemble another thing, intending by means of that resemblance to practise deception or knowing it to be likely that deception will thereby be practised.

Explanation 1.—It is not essential to counterfeiting that the imitation should be exact.

Explanation 2.—When a person causes one thing to resemble another thing and the resemblance is such that a person might be deceived thereby, it shall be presumed, until the contrary is proved, that the person so causing the one thing to resemble the other thing intended by means of that resemblance to practise deception or knew it to be likely that deception would thereby be practised.

"Coin".—S. 230, Penal Code. Coin is metal used for the time being as money and stamped and issued by the authority of some State or Sovereign power in order to be so used.

12. "Pieces of Metal".—S. 3 of the Metal Tokens Act I of 1889 prohibits the making, by private persons, of pieces of metal to be used as money.

13. Disposal of things found in search.—The police officer, conducting the search under this section should dispose of the things found in the search.

(1) In the manner indicated in Clause (d), i.e., take the same before a Magistrate or dispose of them in some place of safety or

(2) Under S. 99 infra when the things are found beyond the jurisdiction of the Court issuing the warrant.

As to the disposal of things produced before the Magistrate, see S. 517 infra

14. Notification under S. 19 of the Sea Customs Act of 1878.—The bringing into British India by sea or by land, of pieces of metal resembling in shape and in size and stamped either on the obverse or on the reverse in imitation of rupees, half rupees, quarter rupees, and eighth rupees, is prohibited as also pieces of paper or mixed metal which not being coin as defined in the Indian Penal Code, are intended to be used as money.

But the bringing of such pieces into British India by a traveller in quantity not exceeding one hundred pieces, and in good faith, for his own use, is not to be deemed prohibited by the above notification.[1]

LIST PREPARED UNDER THE PROVISIONS HEREINAFTER MENTIONED	3

(CODE OF 1872—Ss. 373, Paras. 2 and 3, and 374.)

373. * * * *

Thing found to be taken to Magistrate within whose jurisdiction it is found.

If the thing for which search is made is found in such place, it shall, when the place where the thing is found is nearer to the Magistrate having jurisdiction in such place than to the Magistrate who issued the warrant, be immediately taken before the Magistrate in whose local jurisdiction it is found; and unless there be good cause to the contrary, such Magistrate shall make an order authorizing it to be taken to the Magistrate who issued the warrant.

If the thing be not found after such search, the police officer making the same shall, in addition to the return made to the Magistrate who issued the warrant, report the fact to the Magistrate in whose local jurisdiction the search was made.

Procedure in such cases within Presidency town.

374. If the thing searched for be found within a Presidency town, it shall be taken to the Commissioner of Police or to a Police Magistrate; and such Commissioner or Magistrate shall act in the manner prescribed in section three hundred and seventy-three.

118. * * * *

Thing found to be taken immediately to the Magistrate within whose jurisdiction it is found.

If the thing for which search is made is found in such place, it shall be immediately taken before the Magistrate in whose jurisdiction it is found, and who, unless there be good cause to the contrary, shall make an order authorizing it to be taken to the Magistrate who issued the warrant.

Procedure in such cases within local limits of Supreme Court.

119. If the thing searched for be found within the local limits of a Supreme Court of Judicature, it shall be taken to the Chief Commissioner of Police or to a Police Magistrate, who shall act in the manner prescribed in the last preceding section.

Difference between the Code of 1861 and the Code of 1872.

The later part of S. 118 of the Code of 1861 provided that the things found in execution of a search warrant beyond the jurisdiction of the magistrates issuing the warrant should be taken to the Magistrate in whose jurisdiction the things were found. S. 373, para. 2 of the Code of 1872 provided that such things should be taken to the Magistrate in whose jurisdiction the things were found, only if the place is nearer to that Magistrate than to the Magistrate who issued the warrant.

Difference between Codes of 1872 and 1882.

(1) The word 'Court' was substituted for the word 'Magistrate' with reference to the issue of the warrant, in conformity with a similar change in S. 96 supra.

(2) The provision as to the taking of list of the things found was newly added in 1882. S. 99 of the Code of 1882 has been repeated in the present Code.

2. Scope of the section.—This section deals only with cases in which things are found in execution of a search warrant. So where a Presidency Magistrate, on being requisitioned by a telegram by a District Magistrate to take possession of certain books of a person within the jurisdiction of the former and send them to the latter, summoned the person to produce the same and when they were produced sent them to the District Magistrate, purporting to act under S. 96 and this section it was held that, as the things were not found in execution of a search warrant neither S. 96 nor this section applied to the case and that the sending of the books in accordance with the requisition was not justified.[1]

Any Magistrate within whose jurisdiction things are found in execution of a search warrant can, under this section, order them to be taken to the Court issuing the warrant.[2] intended to promote feelings of enmity or hatred between different classes of His Majesty's subjects or which is deliberately and maliciously intended to outrage the religious feelings of any such class by insulting the religion or the religious beliefs of that class, that is to say, any matter the publication of which is punishable under section 124-A or section 153-A or section 295-A of the Indian Penal Code, the Local Government may, by notification in the local Official Gazette, stating the grounds of its opinion, declare every copy of the issue of the newspaper containing such matter, and every copy of such book or other document, to be forfeited to His Majesty, and thereupon any police-officer may seize the same, wherever found in British India, and any Magistrate may by warrant authorize any Police-officer not below the rank of Sub-Inspector to enter upon and search for the same in any premises where any copy of such issue or any such book or other document may be or may be reasonably suspected to be.

(2) In sub-section (1) "document" includes also any painting, drawing or photograph, or other visible representation.

SYNOPSIS.

LEGISLATIVE CHANGES	1
SCOPE OF THE SECTION	2
NEWSPAPER, BOOK OR DOCUMENT	3
"APPEARS TO THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT"	4
"STATING THE GROUNDS OF ITS OPINION"	5
"SEDITIOUS MATTER"	6

1. Legislative Changes.—

(1) This section was newly inserted by the Press Law Repeal and Amendment Act (XIV of 1922).

(2) The words "or any matter. . . . clauses of His Majesty's subjects" were added after the words "Seditious matter" by Act XXXVI of 1926. The reason for the addition was stated as follows:—

"There is no provision which enables similar action" (i.e., provided as by this section) . "To be taken against publications calculated to promote feelings of hatred or enmity between different classes of His Majesty's subjects. The publication and circulation of such documents have the effect of spreading and intensifying the feelings of communal bitterness and hatred, and as the law now stands even if a prosecution is launched under S. 153-A of the Indian Penal Code there is no effective power to check circulation''.[1]

(3) The words ''or which is deliberately and maliciously. . . . . of that class'' have been added by Act XXV of 1927.

2. Scope of the section.—Ss. 99-A to 99-G have been based on Ss. 12, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21 and 22 of the Indian Press Act (I of 1910) now repealed. This section corresponds to S. 12 of the Act but is more limited in its scope.

3. Newspaper, book or document.—The word ''newspaper'' has been defined in S. 1 of the Press and Registration Act, 1867, as meaning, ''any printed periodical work containing public news or comments on public news''. It thus involves the idea of periodicity and also the fact that what is contained in the paper is public news or comment thereon.[1]

The word 'book' has been defined by the same section as including every volume, part or division of a volume and pamphlet, in any language, and every sheet of music, map, chart, or plan separately printed or lithographed.

Under S. 3, Clause 16 of the General Clauses Act (X of 1897) ''document'' includes ''any matter written, expressed or described upon any substance by means of letters, figures or marks or by more than one of those means which is intended to be used or which may be used, for the purpose of recording that matter''. Under sub-S. 2 of this section it also includes any painting, drawing or photograph or other visible representation.[1-a] It is not necessary for the application of the section that the document sought to be forfeited should by itself disclose the seditious intent. It may be read in the light of other documents whether prior or subsequent in date and the seditious nature of the document may be apparent from those other documents.[2] The fact that a document is an advertisement of a forthcoming book is, by itself, not sufficient to protect it from forfeiture if it contains seditious matter, but in the absence of such matter, the mere fact that it is intimately connected with the book which contains seditious matter is not sufficient to enable the forfeiture thereof under this section.[3]

4. ''Appears to the Local Government''.—Two conditions are necessary to a forfeiture in accordance with the terms of this section. First, it must appear to the Local Government that the newspaper, book or document contains any seditious matter and, secondly, the Local Government must, by notification stating the grounds of its opinion, declare such newspaper, book or document to be forfeited. The first condition implies that the publication had been seen and read by the Local Government prior to its declaration of forfeiture, for it must first form an opinion.[1]

5. "Stating the grounds of its opinion".—The requirement as to the statement of the grounds of the opinion of the Local Government is mandatory, and a notification which does not state the grounds of the opinion is not a compliance with the terms of the section.[1] A mere citation of the words of the section is not a statement of the grounds of opinion.[2] The Court in an application to set aside a forfeiture, is however precluded by S. 99-D from entering into the question whether the requirements as to the statement of grounds has been complied with or not. See Notes to S. 99-D.

6. "Seditious matter".—The words "seditious matter" in the section mean any matter the publication of which is punishable under Ss. 124-A, 153-A or 295-A of the Penal Code. See the undermentioned cases bearing upon those sections.[1]

Application to High Court to set aside order of forfeiture.

99-B. Any person having any interest in any newspaper, book or other document, in respect of which an order of forfeiture has been made under section 99-A, may, within two months from the date of such order, apply to the High Court to set aside such order on the ground that the issue of the newspaper, or the book or other document, in respect of which the order was made, did not contain any seditious or other matter of such a nature as is referred to in sub-section (1) of section 99-A.

1. Scope of the section.—This section corresponds to S. 17 of the Indian Press Act, 1910, now repealed.

2. "Within two months from the date of such order".—The words "within two months from the date of such order" cannot be read as meaning "within two months from the date on which notice of the order was served." They only mean "two months from the date of the order of forfeiture." The application under this section is not a remedy by way of appeal and therefore S. 5 of the Limitation Act cannot be applied to it so as to enable the Court to extend the period of two months for sufficient cause.[1]

3. Onus of proof.—There is a conflict of decisions between the High Courts of Allahabad and Lahore as to the onus of proof in applications under this section. According to the Allahabad High Court, the onus lies on the applicant in such cases and it is for him to prove that the order of forfeiture is wrong.[1] But the Lahore High Court has held that the onus is on the Government to justify the order.[2]

ONUS OF PROOF IN APPLICATION TO SET ASIDE ORDER OF FORFEITURE	2
PLEA AS TO TRUTH OF STATEMENTS MADE	3
ORDER UNDER THIS SECTION—IF EVIDENCE IN PROSECUTION UNDER Ss. 124-A, 153-A OR S. 295-A OF THE PENAL CODE	5

1. Powers of Special Bench.—When an application is made to the High Court under S. 99-B in respect of a document the Special Bench is precluded by this section from considering any other point than the question whether, in fact, the matters contained in the document were seditious or not. Thus it cannot enter into the question whether the requirements of S. 99-A as to the statement of grounds in the notification, have been complied with.[1] Where a series of books are published the whole series must be looked to in order to determine whether the passages contained therein are seditious or not.[2] See also cases cited in Note 6 to S. 99-A.

2. Onus of proof in application to set aside order of forfeiture.—In an application under S. 99-B, the onus is cast upon the Local Government to begin and state the case in support of the Local Government's orders.[1] A contrary view, has been expressed in the undermentioned case[1-a] where it has been held that it is for the applicant to convince the Court that the order is wrong. The question of onus is, however, of very little or no practical importance after both parties have been fully heard.[2]

If the language is of a nature calculated to produce or to promote feelings of enmity or hatred, the writer must be presumed to intend that which his act was likely to produce.[3] The Court is not concerned with the motive with which an article is written. Whatever be the ostensible motives, if the effect of the article is seditious the Government cannot be said to be wrong in ordering a forfeiture under S. 99-A.[4]

3. Plea as to truth of statements made.—In an application under S. 99-B a plea that the statements contained in the publication are supported by authority or are true can neither be pleaded nor proved and are immaterial.[1]

4. Effect of difference of opinion.—Where the High Court is left in doubt after hearing the application it should set aside the order, and not as in the case of an appeal in a civil suit, confirm the order.[1] The following cases[2] under S. 19 of the Press Act, 1910 may also be referred to.

5. Order under the section—If evidence in prosecution under Ss. 124-A, 153-A, or 295-A of the Penal Code.—In a prosecution for an offence under Ss. 124-A or 153-A or 295-A of the Penal Code, a judgment under this section refusing to set aside an order of forfeiture is admissible as evidence under S. 11 or under S. 13 of the Evidence Act, 1872.[1]

99-E. On the hearing of any such application with reference to any newspaper, any copy of such newspaper may be given in evidence in aid of the proof of the nature or tendency of the words, signs or visible representations contained in such newspaper in respect of which the order of forfeiture was made.

the nature or tendency of the words, etc., in respect of which the order of forfeiture has been made.[1] S. 14 of the Evidence Act would not make such copies relevant, unless the existence of a state of mind, or body or bodily feeling is in issue or relevant. In this respect therefore this section is wider than S. 14 of the Evidence Act.[2] But it does not exclude any other evidence that may be otherwise admissible.[3]

The section applies only where, if the article stood alone, there may be doubt or ambiguity as to the character, nature or tendency of the words used and not when the meaning of the article is apparent on its face.[4] Nor does it apply to publication other than newspapers.[5]

The words "in aid of the proof of the nature, etc.," cannot be construed to mean that no such evidence in disproof of the nature or tendency of the words complained of can be let in. The section may be utilised both by the person affected by the order of forfeiture, precisely in the same manner as by the Crown.[6]

3. "In aid of the proof of the nature, or tendency of".—A copy of the newspaper other than the one forfeited is admissible in evidence under this section only "in aid of the proof of the nature or tendency of the words, etc.," and for no other purpose[1] such as the policy of the paper[2] the truth of the statements made[3] or the loyalty of the writer.[4] Further it must be such that a perusal of the same throws appreciable light on the nature or tendency of the aritcle forfeited.[5] The word "tendency" is not to be confused with the word "intention". Intention and tendency are entirely different things. Intention has reference to the state of the mind of the actor. Tendency on the other hand has reference to the possible result of the act. The use of the word tendency does not show that intention is an essential element in the determination of the true character of the words.[6] See also Note 2 ante.

SYNOPSIS.

PROCEDURE APPLICABLE TO PROCEEDINGS UNDER THIS SECTION .. .. Note No. 1
"THE AMOUNT OF COSTS" 2

1. Procedure applicable to proceedings under this section.—Where no rules are framed under this section, the procedure in the case of applications under S. 99-B is the practice followed in proceedings other than suits and appeals. The exclusion of the practice in "suits" and the provision for an order for the payment of costs suggest that regard is intended to be had to the practice in miscellaneous civil proceedings.[1]

2. "The amount of costs".—The costs of one successful party, so far as they may be found to have been reasonably incurred should be paid by the other side to whose action the incurring of costs was due.[1]

1. Scope and applicability of the section.—The provision for the search for persons wrongfully confined was first introduced by S. 100 of the Code of 1882 and has been re-enacted in this section. The section is limited to persons wrongfully confined and is not as wide as the powers of the High Courts under S. 491 infra to issue directions in the nature of Habeas Corpus.[1] As to the power to compel restoration of women and female children abducted or unlawfully detained, See S. 552 infra.

(1) (1896) Rat. Un. Re. Cr. Cas. 839 (839), Empress v. Muktabai.

A District Court ordering the arrest of a ward under S. 25 of the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890, is by virtue of Sub-S. 2 of that section a Magistrate of the First Class within the meaning of this section.

3. "Reason to believe".—A Magistrate cannot issue a warrant under this section unless he has reason to believe that a person is wrongfully confined.[1] But he is not bound to hold a regular enquiry before issuing the warrant. He may act merely on an application of the complainant[2] though it would be wise to hold some enquiry or to give notice to the opposite party[2-a] and not merely rely on the allegation of an interested person of whom he knows nothing.[3]

4. Confinement should amount to an offence.—It is not in every case of confinement, that a Magistrate can issue a warrant. He can do so only in those cases where the confinement amounts to an offence. See Ss. 339, 340 and 368 of the Penal Code. So where a boy was taken away by the natural father from the house of the alleged adoptive father, on the ground that there was no adoption and the latter applied under this section for recovery of the boy, it was held that it was doubtful whether any offence had been committed and consequently this section was held not to apply.[1]

5. Form of warrant.—There is no form prescribed for a warrant under the section, and there is nothing illegal in the Magistrate using a form prescribed under S. 96[1] or S. 98[2] with the necessary alterations suited to this section.

See also Note 27 to S. 96 ante.

6. Place of search.—It is not illegal for a Magistrate to issue a warrant under this section without confining it to any particular place. But where a particular place is specified in the warrant, the officer to whom the warrant is directed, has no power to search outside that place and take the person into custody; nor has he power to endorse it to another officer, authorising him to execute the same, outside the place specified in the warrant.[1]

7. Who may make the search.—See Notes 23 and 24 to S. 96 ante.

8. Resistance to illegal search.—See Note 27 to S. 96 ante.

9. Such order as seems proper.—When a person wrongfully confined is brought under a warrant, before the Magistrate, he is bound to hear the parties concerned, and should after such enquiry, as may be necessary, pass such orders as may seem right.[1] Where the person for whom a search warrant is issued

Search-warrants may in cases of emergency be executed without endorsement.

118. In any case in which there is reason to believe that the delay occasioned by obtaining the endorsement of the Magistrate in whose District the warrant is to be executed, will prevent the discovery of the thing for which search is to be made, the Police-Officer charged with the execution of the search-warrant may execute the same in any place beyond the

S. 101, Note 1.

1. Scope and applicability.—This section makes applicable, so far as may be, to search warrants under Ss. 96, 98, 99-A and 100, the provisions relating to the form, direction and execution of warrants of arrest contained in Ss. 43, 75, 77, 79, 82, 83 and 84 ante.

The chapters dealing with arrest and search respectively in the Codes of 1861 and 1872 repeated the procedure to be adopted in the same terms in the case of warrant for arrest and for search[1]. In order to obviate such repetition of language, S. 101 of the Code of 1882 corresponding to this section was introduced.

120. In any case in which it may appear necessary, a Magistrate may, by the warrant, order search to be made in a place out of the jurisdiction, and may direct that the warrant be executed either after or without obtaining the endorsement of the Magistrate within whose jurisdiction the search is to be made. When a Magistrate issues a warrant under this section, he shall inform the Magistrate within whose jurisdiction the house or place to be searched is situate, or if the house or place be situate within the local limits of any Supreme Court of Judicature, he shall inform the Chief Commissioner of Police of the issue of such warrant.

Magistrate may, when necessary, issue search-warrant to be executed in the jurisdiction of another Magistrate.

121. It shall be competent to a Magistrate issuing a warrant for the search of any house or place out of the jurisdiction of the Magistrate of the District, to direct the warrant to the Magistrate of the District in which such house or place is situate, and to transmit the same by post. On receipt of the warrant by the Magistrate to whom it is directed, he shall endorse his name on the warrant and enforce its execution in the same manner as if the warrant had been originally issued by himself. If the warrant is to be executed within the local limits of any Supreme Court of Judicature, it shall be addressed to the Chief Commissioner of Police or to a Police Magistrate. In such case any property found on search made, may be dealt with as provided in Ss. 118 and 119 of this Act.

Magistrate may send search-warrant by post to the Magistrate of another District.

122. If the house or place to be searched is closed, it shall be the duty of any person residing in or in charge of such house or place, on demand of the Officer or other person executing the warrant, to allow such officer or other person free ingress thereto, and to afford all reasonable facilities for a search therein.

Persons in charge of dwelling house, &c., to allow the search.

123. A Police-Officer, or other person authorized by a warrant to search any house or place, may break open any outer or inner door or window of the house or place, in order to execute such warrant, if, after notification of his authority and purpose, and demand of admittance duly made, he cannot otherwise obtain admittance.

Place to be searched may be broken open.

124. If the place ordered to be searched is a zenanah or apartment in the actual occupancy of a woman who, according to the customs of the country, does not appear in public, the officer or other person charged with the execution of the warrant shall give notice to such woman in such zenanah or apartment, not being a woman against whom a warrant of arrest has been issued, that she is at liberty to withdraw, and, after giving such notice and allowing a reasonable time for the woman to withdraw, and affording her every reasonable facility for withdrawing, such officer or other person may enter such zenanah or apartment for the purpose of completing the search, using at the same time every precaution consistent with these provisions for preventing the clandestine removal of property.

Breaking of zenanah or female apartment..

3. "May proceed in manner provided by S. 48".—If ingress into a place liable to search or inspection cannot be obtained as mentioned in sub-S. 1, the person executing the warrant may proceed in manner provided by S. 48 ante, i.e., by breaking open any outer or inner door or window of such house or place. It has been held in the undermentioned case[1] that neither this section nor S. 48 justifies the search officer to scale the outer wall and effect a burglarious entry into the house. It is submitted that the view cannot be accepted as a sound one. If instead of breaking open a door an outer wall can be scaled and the object effected, there is really less harm done and it cannot be the object of the legislature to see that doors are broken notwithstanding that such a course is unnecessary.[2]

4. Any person may be searched—sub-S. 3.—Sub-S. 3 which is new makes a search-warrant more effective by permitting the search of a person in or about the place upon whom reasonable suspicion rests, of his having concealed about his person any articles sought for. Where such a search is made, a list of articles so found and taken possession of should be prepared and a copy of the list delivered to the person so searched at his request.

Changes made in the Code of 1882—

(1) In para. 2 the words "and a list of all things seized in the course of such search and of the places in which they are respectively found shall be prepared by such officer or other person and signed by such witnesses" were newly added.

(2) In para. 3 the words "and a copy of the list prepared under this section signed by the said witnesses shall be delivered to such occupant at his request" were newly added.

Changes made in the Code of 1898—

Sub-Section 4 is new.

Changes made in 1923—

(1) The words "and may issue an order in writing to them or any of them so to do" were added at the end of Sub-S. 1.

(2) Sub-section 5 was newly added.

2. Scope and object of the section.—The object of the section is—

(1) to prevent possible chicanery and unfair dealings on the part of the officers entrusted with search warrants.[1]

Section 103—Note 2.

(1) (1906) 4 Cri. L. Jour. 390 (393) (Rang.), Ah Tuck v. Emperor. (1914) 1914 Low. Bur. 128 (134): 8 L.

(2) to safeguard the rights of the subject and to ensure that the search is conducted honestly.[2]

S. 103, Notes 2—4.

(3) to ensure confidence in the neighbours and in the public generally that anything incriminating which may be found in the premises searched shall be really found and shall not be "planted"[3] and

(4) to obtain as reliable evidence as possible of the search and exclude the possibility of any concoction or malpractice of any kind.[4]

Under the rules framed by the various Local Governments under S. 72 of the Police Act, 1861, it is provided that before making the search, the search party must themselves submit to being searched by the witnesses in order to leave no room for suspicion that incriminating articles are being smuggled into the place.[5] The provisions of this section will apply so far as may be to search under S. 165 infra.[6] Sub-S. (1) of the section refers only to the search of places. The officer who intends to search a person cannot issue an order in writing to any inhabitants of the locality to be witnesses for such a search and their presence is not necessary.[7]

3. Place of search.—A cart is not a 'place' such as is contemplated in this section and therefore its provisions will not apply to the search of a 'cart'.[1]

4. Search witnesses.—Under this section it is obligatory on the officer about to execute a search warrant to call on and get two or more respectable inhabitants of the locality to witness the search.[1] They must be called before the search is started. The object of this section would be entirely defeated if it were open to the police to raid the place first and then call the witnesses.[2]

The witnesses for the search can be examined as witnesses in the case as to the fact of the search, but a Court is not bound to accept their evidence as true, where they are shown to be false[3] or where there are discrepancies therein.[4]

The evidence of a person cannot be distrusted solely on the ground that on a previous occasion he had acted as a witness in another search[5] though it is objectionable to be constantly calling on the same person to witness searches.[6]

The mere fact that the witnesses for the search helped the police in making the search will not make the search invalid.[7] See also Notes 5 to 11 and 13 below.

5. Who can call search witnesses.—It is only the officer about to make the search and not any other person that can call for witnesses for search.[1]

6. Respectable inhabitants.—The section requires that the search should be conducted in the presence of two or more respectable inhabitants of the locality.[1-a]

The words "respectable inhabitants of the locality" must be construed in the light of the object of the section in accordance with the maxim ut res magis valeat, quam pareat—that an act may prevail rather than perish. As has been seen in Note 2 already the legislature has made this provision to ensure fair dealing and a feeling of confidence and security amongst the public in regard to a sometimes necessary invasion of a private right regarded as almost sacred under the British system. In order to give effect to this object, it is necessary that the persons selected should be absolutely unprejudiced and uninterested in the results of what they have to take part in.[1] The selection of officers connected with the police or persons who are not impartial, is not contemplated by the section.[2] Thus a head man of a ward in Rangoon who is appointed by the Commissioner of Police is not a fit person to be selected as a witness,[3] but such a head man in other towns, who is not appointed by such officer is not incompetent to witness a search under the section.[4]

7. Of the locality.—Only respectable persons of the locality are to be selected as witnesses for the search.[1] The words "of the locality" do not mean that they should be living within a stone's throw of the house to be searched.[2] Nor are the words restricted to mean the same quarter.[3] They are comprehensive and will include places even within 3 or 4 miles of the place of search.[4] In a densely populated city like Rangoon "locality" has, however, been held to mean the immediate vicinity and not a place a couple of miles away.[5]

But the fact that the witnesses are from a different locality will not necessarily make the search invalid.[6] The emphasis of the section is on the word "respectable" and not on the word "locality",[7] and the mere fact that a witness for search is of a different locality would not justify a resistance to such search.[8]

8. Search shall be made in their presence.—Both the letter and the spirit of the section require that the witnesses should actually accompany the persons making the search and should be actual witnesses to the fact of finding of the property. It is not a sufficient compliance with this section that they should be merely summoned and kept present outside a building while the search is being carried on within it and then called in to see what has been found.[1] But if the place searched is visible to witnesses from outside the room or house they need not be inside it.[2]

The mere fact that the witnesses are not present throughout the search and did not witness every detail of it, would not justify the setting aside of the conviction, but where such a circumstance has left the evidence in an unsatisfactory condition so that there is a reasonable doubt as to whether the article found was really in the possession of the accused, a conviction cannot be sustained.[3]

It is not necessary that the search witnesses must have been present at the scene before the arrival of the officer making the search. It is sufficient compliance with the section that the search witnesses arrived on the scene before the search begins.[4]

S. 103, Notes 9—12.

9. Shall not be required unless summoned.—A person called upon to attend and witness a search cannot be compelled by the officer conducting the search to attend court to give evidence without a summons in that behalf.[1]

10. Duty of prosecution to call search witnesses.—An officer connected with the investigation cannot be deemed to be an entirely satisfactory witness for the purpose of proving the search.[1] So ordinarily the prosecution should produce the search witnesses and they would be guilty of suppressing material evidence if they do not do so.[2] But it is not the duty of the prosecution to put every search witness in the witness box. The discretion is left to the Court to require or not the attendance of such witnesses.[3] Where the officer desires that the evidence of the witnesses are required to fortify his own evidence, then he must call those witnesses.[4]

11. Refusal or neglect to attend and witness search.—Before the introduction of sub-S. (5) in 1923 it was held by the High Court of Madras in In the matter of Ramaya Naika[1] that a refusal of a search witness to sign the list is not a refusal to render "assistance" within the meaning of S. 187 of the Penal Code. In a later case,[2] however, the same High Court held that the failure to attend and witness a search in obedience to a requisition under this section is a failure to render "assistance" within S. 187 of the Penal Code. A similar view was taken also by the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Lower Burma.[3] Under the present sub-S. (5), the refusal to "attend and witness a search under this section" should be deemed to be an offence under S. 187, Penal Code. The words "attend and witness a search under this section" would, it is submitted, include attending, witnessing, and also signing the search list. The decision in Ramaya Naika's case is, therefore, it is submitted, now no longer good law.

12. List of things seized.—The provision as to the preparation of the search list was newly introduced in the Code of 1882 as a means of putting a check upon the irregularities which occur in the course of searches. An officer conducting a search should, therefore, strictly comply with this provision and prepare a search list in the manner specified.[1] He should exercise the very greatest caution in fulfilling the formalities of the law for making a search and providing every possible safeguard so as not to allow any handle for adverse criticism.[1-a]

The properties found and places searched, should ordinarily be proved by the production of search list which should be exhibited as relevant evidence of those matters.[2] But the contents need not be proved by the list alone. Other evidence of its contents is admissible. Section 91 of the Evidence Act does not apply to such cases.[3] If prohibited articles are found in the possession of the accused a conviction based thereon will be valid.[4] As to the manner of preparing search lists and numbering the several items of property found, see the undermentioned cases.[5]

13. Signed by the witnesses.—The search list should be signed by the witnesses for the search and unless it is so signed no presumption based upon such list can be drawn against the accused.[1]

14. Occupant of the place searched.—The words "occupant of the place" are not intended to cover any person who may happen to be in the place at the time but they refer back to the person mentioned in S. 102, supra that is "a person residing in or being, in charge of the place".[1]

15. Right of occupant to be present.—Where the occupant is present and demands to be allowed to be present at the search he must be permitted to do so. The rule is one not merely of technicality but of substance inasmuch as it is enacted to guarantee the realities of the search and the discoveries made thereat.[1] Where the search officer insists on keeping the occupant out and the occupant causes hurt to the officer in attempting to go into his house on physical resistance being offered by the officer, he cannot be held guilty of an offence under S. 332 of the Penal Code.[2] It is, however, not necessary that the occupant must be present at the search. The section only says that he should be permitted to do so.[3]

16. Applicability of the section to searches under other Acts.—As to the applicability of this section to searches under other special or local Acts

17. Irregularities in search.—No irregularity in a search can vitiate the trial nor effect the conviction of the accused unless the accused has been prejudiced by the defect.[1] Thus the failure to call respectable persons of the locality to witness the search[2] or the failure to prepare a search list on the spot[3] or the addition of new items to the search list after it had been signed by the witnesses[3-a] are irregularities that will not vitiate the trial in the absence of proof

Illegal impounding. See Note 1, Pt. 2 and Note 4, Pt. 2.

1. "Any Court".—'Any Court' in the section means any Court which has seisin of the case in which the document or thing is produced. Thus, the High Court can order to be impounded an alleged forged document produced in the case before it, on revision.[1] But a District Magistrate cannot impound any document which is produced in a case pending before a subordinate Magistrate.[2]

2. "May, if it thinks fit".—The section gives a discretion to the Court to impound the document or thing produced before it under the provisions of the Code.

When therefore a document is not produced under the provisions of the Code, it cannot be impounded under this section.[1] Where a summons to produce was issued by a Magistrate who had no authority to issue it, and certain account books were produced in obedience to such summons, they cannot be said to have been produced "under this Code", and this section cannot therefore apply.[2] As to the disposal of documents or things produced otherwise before the Court, see S. 517 and the undermentioned case.[3] its correlative that "what is done by another is to be deemed done by the party himself; qui per alium facit per seipsum facere videtur." As has been seen in Note 1 to S. 65, ante when the Legislature empowers an officer to delegate an authority to do a certain act to another person, it necessarily implies that the original authority to do such act is fully and completely in the officer himself, but that it is necessary for the exigencies of business that it should be done in the majority of cases by persons acting under authority derived from him. This principle is adopted by the legislature in this section as well as in S. 65, ante.[2] S. 105, Note 1.

Where a Magistrate does not issue a search warrant but acts under this section, he must strictly confirm to the provisions thereof. Thus where he does not enter the house or room to be searched, but stands outside it, and sends the complainant or the Police Inspector to search, he cannot be said "to direct the search to be made in his presence" and the search would be contrary to law.[3]

If the conviction is set aside on appeal or otherwise, the bond so executed shall become void.

Personal recognizance to keep the peace in cases of conviction.

489. Whenever a person accused of rioting, assault, or other breach of the peace, or with abetting the same, or with assembling armed men or taking other unlawful measures with the evident intention of committing the same, is convicted of such offence before a Court of Session, or Magistrate of a Division of a District, or Magistrate of the first class,

Such Court or Magistrate may, in addition to any other order passed in the case, direct that the person so convicted be required to execute a formal engagement, in a sum proportionate to his condition in life and the circumstances of the case, for keeping the peace during such period as it may appear proper to fix in each instance, not exceeding one year if the sentence or order be passed by a Magistrate, or three years if the sentence or final order be passed by a Court of Session, with a provision that, if the same be not given, the person required to enter into the engagement shall be kept in simple imprisonment for any time not exceeding one year if the order be passed by a Magistrate, or three years if the order be passed by the High Court or by a Court of Session, unless within such period such person execute such formal engagement as aforesaid.

S. 106.

(3) An order under this section may also be made by an Appellate Court or by the High Court when exercising its powers of revision.

(3) An order under this section may also be made by an Appellate Court including a Court hearing appeals under S. 407, or by the High Court when exercising its powers of revision.

Security to keep the peace.

490. Whenever it appears necessary to require security for keeping the peace, in addition to the personal recognizance of the party so convicted, the Court or Magistrate empowered to require a personal recognizance may require security in addition thereto, and may fix the amount of the security-bond to be executed by the surety or sureties; with a provision that, if the same be not given, the party required to find the security shall be kept in simple imprisonment for any time not exceeding one year if the order be passed by the Magistrate of the District, Magistrate of a Division of a District, or by a First Class Magistrate, or three years if the order be passed by the High Court or by a Court of Session.

Penalty of bond.

493. The bond shall be in the form (E) given in the second schedule, or to the like effect; and its penalty shall be fixed with a due regard to the circumstances of the case and the means of the party.

The amount in which the sureties shall be bound shall not exceed the penalty named in the bond.

Personal recognizance to keep the peace in cases of conviction.

280. Whenever a person charged with rioting, assault, or other breach of the peace, or with abetting the same, or with assembling armed men or taking other unlawful measures with the evident intention of committing the same, shall be convicted of such charge before any Court of Session or the Magistrate of the District or other Officer exercising the powers of Magistrate, and the Court or Magistrate or other Officer as aforesaid by which the accused person is convicted, or the Court or Magistrate or other officer as aforesaid by which final sentence or order in the case shall be passed, shall be of opinion that it is just and necessary to require a penal recognizance for keeping the peace, from the person so convicted, it shall be lawful to such Court or Magistrate or other Officer as aforesaid so convicting the accused person, or so passing the final sentence or order as aforesaid, in addition, to direct that the person so convicted be required to execute a formal engagement, in a sum proportionate to his condition in life and the circumstances of the case, for keeping the peace during such period as it may appear proper to fix in each instance, not exceeding one year if the sentence or order be passed by the Magistrate of the District or other Officer exercising the powers of a Magistrate, or three years if the sentence or final order be passed by a Court of Session. When any accused person shall be convicted of any offence specified in this Section by an Officer not exercising the powers of a Magistrate, such Officer, if he consider it just and necessary to require a penal recognizance for keeping the peace from the person so convicted, shall report the case to the Magistrate of the District, or other Officer exercising the powers of a Magistrate to whom such Officer may be subordinate, who shall deal with the case as if the conviction had been before himself.

Security to keep the peace.

281. In cases in which it may appear necessary to require security for keeping the peace, in addition to the personal recognizance of the party so convicted, it shall also be lawful to the Court or Magistrate or other Officer

Difference between the Codes of 1861 and 1872

Sections 280 and 281 of the Code of 1861 enabled any officer exercising the powers of a Magistrate to require a personal engagement from a convicted person. Under Ss. 489 and 490 of the Code of 1872, only a Magistrate of a Division of a District or a Magistrate of the first class was enabled to take such recognizance.

The other differences are not material.

Changes made in 1882—

(1) Criminal intimidation by threatening injury to person or property was made one of the offences to which the section would apply.[1]

(2) The High Court, the Presidency Magistrate and the District Magistrate were also empowered to pass orders under this section.

(3) The maximum period for which security could be demanded was made three years in all cases. In the prior Codes, it was one year if the order was made by a Magistrate[2] and three years, if it was made by a Court of Session.

(4) The power to order security was conferred on the Court or Magistrate convicting the accused. In the prior Codes, the power was conferred on the Magistrate or Court, by whom the accused was convicted or the final sentence or order was made in the case. See Note 19.

(5) A provision corresponding to sub-S. (2) of the present section was newly added.[3]

Changes made in 1898—

(1) The words qualifying criminal intimidation were omitted.

(2) The words "other offences involving breach of peace" were substituted for "other breach of peace".

(3) Sub-S. 3 was newly added.

Changes made in 1923—

(1) In sub-S. (1) the words "rioting" and "of assembling armed men or taking other unlawful measures with the evident intention of committing the same have been omitted and the words

"any offence punishable under Chapter VIII of the Indian Penal Code, other than an offence punishable under Ss. 143, 149, 153-A or 154 thereof" have been introduced instead. See Note 4.

(2) In sub-S. 3, the words "including a Court hearing appeals under S. 407" have been added.

2. Scope of the section.—This chapter contemplates two kinds of security being taken;

(a) for keeping the peace and

(b) for good behaviour.

This section and the next deal with the former and Ss. 108 to 110, with the latter. Security for keeping the peace can be required under this section when a person is convicted of certain offences and under the next section, when, though he is not convicted of any offence, there is reason to apprehend that he is likely to commit or provoke a breach of the peace.

In order that this section may apply, it is essential,

(1) that there must be a conviction,

(2) that such conviction must be for one of the offences mentioned in the section,

(3) that such conviction must be by one of the Courts mentioned in the section, and

(4) that such Court must be of the opinion that it is necessary to bind over the accused to keep the peace.

The power under the section may also be exercised by an appellate Court or by the High Court in revision.

The section contemplates only one order requiring security being passed at the time of passing sentence on the accused. There is no provision for a preliminary order to show cause and final order after enquiry as is provided for in the case of proceedings under S. 107.

3. "Person accused of an offence".—The power to order security under this section exists only as against an accused person. A Complainant cannot be ordered to give security under this section.[1]

4. "Any offence punishable under Chap. VIII . . . S. 154 thereof." —These words are new and were introduced in 1923. (See Note 1, supra.) Their effect is to enable security being demanded from persons accused of any offence under Chap. VIII of the Penal Code, except those specified in the section. Hence the undermentioned cases decided before the Amendment of 1923 are no longer good law.[1]

S. 106, Notes 5—9.

5. "Offences punishable under S. 143".—Prior to the amendment of the section in 1923, it was held in some cases that on a conviction under S. 143 of the Penal Code, security could be ordered if the facts of the particular case showed that the unlawful assembly had intended to use force,[1] while in a number of other cases, it was held that an offence under S. 143 by itself did not justify action under S. 106.[2] Under the present section, as amended, it is clear that on a conviction under S. 143 of the Penal Code, the accused cannot be ordered to give security for keeping the peace.[2]

6. Offence punishable under S. 149 of the Penal Code.—An offence under S. 149 of the Penal Code read with another section of the Penal Code (for no offence is punishable under S. 149 alone) is not one on conviction of which the accused can be bound over to keep the peace.[1]

7. Offence of "rioting".—The word "rioting" which occurred in the section prior to the amendment of 1923 has been omitted. But as the offence of rioting (S. 147) is one under Chapter VIII of the Penal Code and does not fall under any of the excluded sections, an accused person convicted of rioting can be bound over to keep the peace under this section.[1]

8. "Offence of assembling armed men."—Prior to the amendment of 1923, "assembling armed men or taking other unlawful measures with the evident intention of committing the same" (offence involving breach of peace) was one of the matters on conviction for which the accused could be bound over to keep the peace.[1] These words have now been omitted. But it is conceived that the offences referred to by these words would in particular cases be covered by Chapter VIII of the Penal Code, the whole of which with certain exceptions has been expressly brought within the purview of the section. See for instance, S. 150 of the Penal Code (engaging members for unlawful assembly).

9. Assault.—As will be seen from Note 10, infra, the language of the section makes it clear that the offence of assault is treated as one which necessarily involves a breach of the peace. In the case of such an offence therefore it is not necessary to record an express finding as to a breach of the peace.[1] The contrary view expressed in the undermentioned case[2] is, it is submitted, not correct. See for a full discussion Note 10 below. S. 106, Notes 9—10.

10. "Assault or other offence involving a breach of the peace".— The word "peace" means a quiet behaviour towards the King and his subjects; and the words "breach of the peace" mean a violation of that quiet peace and security which is guaranteed by the laws for the personal comfort of the subjects of the kingdom.[1] The words "assault or other offence involving a breach of the peace" make it clear that assault is an offence which involves a breach of the peace within the meaning of the section.[1-a] An assault as defined in S. 351 of the Penal Code (which is the definition to be adopted for the purposes of this Code also)[2] is an offence against a person and not against the public. It consequently follows that the breach of the peace contemplated by the section is not a breach of the public peace.[3]

Giving the language of the section its plain meaning the words "offence involving a breach of the peace" must mean an offence, one of the constituting elements of which is the commission of or the intention to commit, a breach of the peace on the part of the offender.[4] Thus the offence of causing hurt or grievous hurt which necessarily has, as one of its elements, the commission of a breach of the peace as explained above is an offence "involving a breach of the peace".[5] An offence of criminal trespass (i.e., entering upon property with intent to commit an offence or to intimidate insult or annoy any person in possession of such property) may or may not be an offence involving a breach of the peace. If the entry is made with intent to commit, for example, the offence of hurt or assault, one of the elements of the criminal trespass of which the accused is convicted will be an intention to commit a breach of the peace and such criminal trespass will therefore be an "offence involving a breach of the peace."[6] On the other hand, if the entry is made with intent, for example, to commit theft,[7] or to have sexual intercourse with the complainant's wife,[8] the criminal trespass will not be an offence involving a breach of the peace. See also the undermentioned cases.[8-a]

An offence which does not require the commission of, or the intention to commit, a breach of the peace, as a necessary element thereof, is not one involving a breach of the peace.[9] The fact that in the course of commission of such offence the accused as a matter of fact does acts involving a breach of the peace[10] or which are likely to lead to a breach of the peace or which are likely to provoke persons other than the offender to commit a breach of the peace[11] will not make the offence itself one "involving a breach of the peace".

The above principles have, however, not always been kept in view by judicial decisions with the result that there is a great diversity of opinion. One set of decisions hold that the words "breach of the peace" mean only a breach of the public peace and that offences such as that of causing hurt or grievous hurt wherein injuries are inflicted only against a particular individual are not offences involving a breach of the peace.[12] Another class of decisions has held that if such offences are committed in a public place, or near or in sight of a public place, they may be regarded as involving a breach of the public peace.[13] A third class of cases has held that it is not necessary that a breach of the peace either actually committed or intended, should form an element of the offence, but that if in the course of committing it, the accused is found on the evidence to have committed acts amounting to a breach of the peace, then the offence could be regarded as one involving a breach of the peace.[14] It has accordingly been held in this class of cases that the Court should expressly give a finding as to the existence of a breach of the peace before it can proceed to act under this section.[15] A fourth class of cases hold that even though a breach of the peace may not be an element of the offence of which the accused is convicted, it may be said to involve a breach of the peace if there is a probable breach of the peace.[16] In the undermentioned case[17] it was held that if the offence—for example, an offence under S. 504 of the Penal Code—provoked the commission of a breach of the peace on the part of others, it is an ingredient of the offence under S. 504 which is therefore an offence involving a breach of the peace.

It is respectfully submitted that none of the above classes of views can be supported on principle. If in committing an offence of which a breach of the peace is not an element, the accused does commit acts amounting to a breach of the peace, he should be charged and convicted for the offence of which such breach of the peace is an element.[18] To act under this section without doing so seems to be clearly an exercise of jurisdiction not warranted by the terms of the section.

11. Criminal intimidation.—This is one of the offences on conviction for which the accused can be bound down to keep the peace. It is important to note that there should be a conviction for criminal intimidation; the mere fact that the facts of the case disclose the commission of such an offence by the accused is not enough.[1]

S. 106, Notes 12—15.

12. "Is convicted of such an offence".—The jurisdiction to pass an order for security under this section arises only on conviction of an accused person for any of the offences mentioned therein.[1] So, where the accused person is acquitted he cannot be ordered to give security under this section.[2] See also Note 11, supra.

Where the accused is only convicted of an attempt to commit one of the offences mentioned in the section, there is no jurisdiction to pass an order for security against him on such conviction.[3]

13. Conviction in summary trial.—An order for security under this section can be passed even if the accused is convicted in a summary trial.[1]

14. Courts empowered to act under this section.—The power to require security under this section is conferred only on the High Court, the Court of Session, or the Court of a Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate, Sub-Divisional Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class. A Magistrate of the third class has therefore no power to act under this section. A Magistrate of the second class also has no power to do so unless he is a Sub-Divisional Magistrate.

S. 18 confers the full powers of a Presidency Magistrate on a Bench of Honorary Presidency Magistrates. Such a Bench can take action under this section.[1]

In a case tried by a Bench of Magistrates, if any of its members has first class powers, the Bench can pass an order under the section. (See S. 15, sub-S. 2, supra.)

See also S. 349, infra.

15. "Such Court is of opinion . . . peace".—The mere fact that a person is convicted and sentenced for one of the offences mentioned in this section is not enough for binding him over under it. It is further necessary that the Court should be of opinion that "it is necessary to require such person to execute a bond for keeping the peace".[1] The necessity or desirability of requiring security in particular cases are guided by the following considerations:—

1. Do the circumstances indicate that a breach of the peace is likely to recur? If they do, then an order for security is justified.[2] If they do not, the accused should not be bound over.[3] Thus, when

2. Would the order for security have the effect of preventing the accused from exercising his legal rights? If so, such an order should not be made.[5]

Illustrations.

(a) The accused's party were in possession of certain land. The complainant's party tried to dispossess them by force. The accused in defending their possession exceeded their right of private defence and were consequently convicted of rioting under S. 147 of the Penal Code. It was held that there was no reason for binding over the accused as that would prevent them from further resisting the unlawful action of the complainant's party and as the complainant was the party who was more likely to break the peace.[6]

(b) The Ijaradar of a market in order to prevent sale of foreign articles used force and caused hurt to certain itinerant vendors. It was held that though he had exceeded his rights under the law, he should not be bound over as he would thereby be practically prevented from exercising his legal rights in the market.[7]

The law does not provide that the Court should record its reasons for forming an opinion that it is necessary to require security. But it is desirable that they are so recorded so that an appellate Court may be in possession of the reasons if they are not otherwise apparent on the face of the records.[8]

16. "At the time of passing sentence".—An order for security under this section must be passed at the time of the conviction and the passing of the sentence.[1] In other words, the order must be part of the decision in the main case.[2] If no such order is passed at the time of passing the sentence but it is considered desirable to bind over the accused, the only procedure by which this can be done is that laid down in S. 107.[3] But the Court must not only record a conviction but pass a substantive sentence before the provisions of S. 106 can come into play.[4]

It has been held by the Bombay High Court[5] that the restriction as to the order for security being passed at the time of passing sentence does not apply to an appellate or revisional Court ordering security under the provisions of sub-S. 3. The reason given is that sub-S. 1 which contains the restriction abovenamed does not control sub-S. 3 which confers the power on appellate and revisional Courts.

As seen in Note 2 above, no notice to show cause why security should not be required is necessary before an order is passed under this section.[6]

The Patna High Court has, however, observed in the undermentioned case[7] that to adopt proceedings under this section without notice to the parties is "an incorrect procedure on general principles of justice".

17. "Notice".—See Note 16, supra.

18. Form and contents of order under section.—An order under this section can only be for security for keeping the peace. Courts have no power to require security for good behaviour under this section.[1-a]

An order under the section should not provide for an engagement to be executed at a future date. Thus an order which directs that the prisoner shall, at the conclusion of the term of his imprisonment, execute a bond for keeping the peace would not be a proper order under the section. The reason is that, under the law, he is at liberty to execute the bond at once or at any time before the expiration of the term of his imprisonment.[1] [See Ss. 120 and 123, infra].

An order under the section must specify the amount for which security is required; otherwise, the order is bad.[2] See Notes to S. 112, infra. The Court has no power to order that securities under this section should be furnished in landed property.[3]

19. "With or without sureties".—The section empowers the Court to order that the bond for keeping the peace should be with sureties. This does not, however, enable the Court to direct that a particular person must be one of the sureties.[1] Further an order requiring a surety for a higher amount than that for which the accused is directed to execute a bond is wrong; the reason is that the surety stands security only for the sum for which the bond is executed by the principal (viz., the accused).[2]

20. "Setting aside of conviction—Effect of—Sub-S. 2.—Sub-S. 2 provides that on the conviction being set aside, the bond so executed shall become void. But it is clear that the order for security based on such conviction also automatically falls to the ground and can be set aside.[1]

21. Alteration of conviction to one under a different section.—Sub-S. (2) provides that if the conviction is set aside on appeal or otherwise, the security bond executed under the section shall become void. But if the conviction is not set aside but merely altered to one under a different section which also is within the ambit of S. 106, the order for security can be allowed to stand.[1]

22. Power of appellate or revisional Court to order security—Sub-S. (3).—Under the Codes of 1861 and 1872, the power to order security on conviction was conferred on the Court by which the accused was convicted or the final sentence or order in the case was passed. Hence it was held under those Codes that an appellate Court had the power to require security under this section though there was no provision therein corresponding to the present sub-S. (3).[1] When the section was re-enacted in the Code of 1882, the words referring to the Court by which the final sentence or order in the case was passed were omitted. Hence it was held under that Code that an appellate Court had no power to require security under this section.[2] This Code, by enacting the present sub-S. (3) has now expressly empowered an appellate Court and the High Court in revision to pass an order for security, under this section.[3] The words "including a Court hearing appeal under S. 407" did not originally occur in the sub-section, but were added by the amendments made in 1923. Hence, prior to the said amendments, there was a conflict of decisions[4] as to whether an appellate Court could pass an order for security under this section where the original trial was before a Magistrate not empowered to act under this section, as for instance, a Magistrate of the third class. This conflict is set at rest by the present amendment as it makes it clear that an appellate Court can require security under the section even in cases where the original trial was before a Magistrate of the second or third class.[5]

But the power under sub-S. (3) cannot be exercised where the offence for which the accused is convicted does not fall within the purview of sub-S. (1).[6]

It should be noted that the power under sub-S. (3) is given to an appellate Court and to the High Court in revision. Hence, a District Magistrate exercising powers of revision has no power to order security under this section.[7]

As to whether the order under sub-S. (3) can be passed subsequent to the passing of the sentence, see Note 16.

23. Appeal.—No appeal will lie against an order to furnish security under this section.[1-a] The reason is that the order is a separate order and not part of the sentence.

Where the right of appeal depends on the length of the period to which the accused is sentenced to imprisonment, the mere fact that he has been ordered to give security under this section will not enable him to appeal if otherwise he cannot do so, although the period of imprisonment to which he would become liable in case of his non-compliance with the order added to the substantive sentence passed against him would reach or exceed the appealable limit.[1]

The appellate Court can, while upholding the conviction, set aside the order for security to keep the peace passed against the accused under this section, the order of the appellate Court in such a case being only an "incidental order" which it is expressly empowered to pass under S. 423, Cl. (d).[2]

24. Revision.—The question of requiring security for keeping the peace is a matter left largely to the discretion of the Court convicting the accused and the High Court in revision will generally be reluctant to interfere with the exercise of such discretion.[1] But the High Court can interfere and will do so if the circumstances of any case require such interference.[2] S. 106, Note 24.

Procedure of Magistrate, etc., not empowered to act under Section 107.

108. When any Magistrate not empowered to proceed under S. 107, or a Court of Session or High Court, has reason to believe that any person is likely to commit a breach of the peace or to do any wrongful act that may probably occasion a breach of the peace, and that such breach of the peace cannot be prevented otherwise than by detaining such person in custody, such Magistrate or Court may issue a warrant for his arrest (if he is not already in custody or before the Court), and may send him before a Magistrate empowered to deal with the case under S. 107. A Magistrate before whom a person is sent under this Section may in his discretion detain such person in custody until the completion of the enquiry hereinafter prescribed.

Summons to any person to show cause why he should not give bond to keep peace.

491. Whenever a Magistrate of a Division of a District, or a Magistrate of the First Class, receives information that any person is likely to commit a breach of the peace, or to do any act that may probably occasion a breach of the peace, he may summon such person to attend at a time and place mentioned in the summons, to show cause why he should not be required to enter into a bond to keep the peace, with or without sureties, as such Magistrate thinks fit.

Explanation I.—A summons calling on a person to show cause why he should not be bound over to keep the peace, may be issued on any report or other information which appears credible and which the Magistrate believes; but the Magistrate cannot bind over a person until he has adjudicated on evidence before him.

Explanation II.—A Magistrate may recall a summons issued under this Section if he thinks proper.

Difference between the Codes of 1872 and 1861—

The Code of 1861 (282) gave the power of drawing up proceedings for security to keep the peace to "Magistrate of the District or other officer exercising the powers of Magistrate", whereas S. 491 of the Code of 1872 conferred the power on a "Magistrate of a division or a district or a Magistrate of the first class."

Changes made in 1882— S. 107, Note 1.

(1) The Presidency Magistrate was made one of the Magistrates who could take action under this section.

(2) Under the Code of 1872, it was provided that proceedings under the section "may be taken either in the district in which the breach of the peace is apprehended or in any district where the person it is desired to bind may be". The Code of 1882 provided that action might be taken on "information that any person is likely to commit a breach of the peace within the local limits of such Magistrate's jurisdiction or that there is within such limits a person who is likely to commit a breach of peace . . . in any place beyond such limits." See Note 19.

(3) The Code of 1872 expressly provided that proceedings might be started on the basis of any report or information "which appeared credible and which the Magistrate believed." The Code of 1861 also used the word "credible" before the word "information" in the section. There are no corresponding words in the Code of 1882.

(4) The Code of 1872 expressly provided that a summons to show cause under the section might be recalled at any time by the Magistrate if he thought proper to do so. This provision was omitted in the Code of 1882.

(5) The word "wrongful" before the words "act that may probably occasion a breach of peace" was newly introduced in the Code of 1882 giving effect to the undermentioned decisions under the previous Codes[1] See Note 11.

(6) The previous Codes provided for the extension of the period of security after it had been ordered, under certain circumstances (Vide S. 290 of the Code of 1861 and 499 of the Code of 1872). No corresponding provision was made in the Code of 1882.[2]

Changes made in 1898—

(1) The words referring to the disturbance of public tranquillity were newly added. See Note 12.

(2) Sub-S. (2) was substituted for the words referring to territorial jurisdiction which occurred in the Code of 1882.

(3) Sub-Ss. (3) and (4) were newly added.

Changes made in 1923—

(1) The words "if in his opinion there is sufficient ground for proceeding" have been inserted in sub-S. (1), Compare S. 204. See Note 13.

(2) The words "pending further action by himself under this chapter" in sub-S. (4) have been substituted for the words "until the completion of the enquiry hereinafter prescribed". See Note 21.

2. Scope and object of Section.—Section 106 and this section deal with the circumstances under which a person can be required to give security for keeping the peace. While the former provides for security being taken on conviction for certain offences, the present section provides for the taking of security in other cases. Hence, where a person is convicted of an offence falling within the scope of S. 106 and it is considered necessary to bind over the accused to keep the peace, the proper procedure is that under S. 106 and if the Magistrate fails to avail himself of his powers under that section he cannot draw up proceedings against the accused under the present section, on the same-materials.[1]

The section is preventive and not punitive. In other words, the section is not intended for the punishment of past offences but for the prevention of acts that may amount to or lead to a breach of the peace hereafter.[2] But the section is applicable notwithstanding that the acts alleged as giving rise to an apprehension of breach of the peace on the part of a person constitute in themselves specific offences for which he may be punished.[3]

In proceedings commenced under this section the Magistrate can only require security for keeping the peace. He has no power to order attachment of property.[4] Similarly, he cannot require a person to execute a bond to observe certain time limits for attendance at a Mosque,[5] so also, a woman cannot be ordered by a Magistrate to enter into a bond not to commit adultery.[6]

The institution of proceedings under the section is not an accusation of an offence; and therefore, if the information proves to be false, the Court has no power to act under S. 250, infra.[7]

For the relative scope of this section and S. 145, see Notes under S. 145.

3. "Is informed".—A Magistrate has no jurisdiction under this section to proceed against any person where there is no information against him. Thus, where A presented a petition to a Magistrate alleging that B was likely to commit a breach of the peace and praying that he should be bound over and the Magistrate on taking his statement came to the conclusion that A himself was a quarrelsome person and called upon him to show cause why he should not be bound down, it was held that the Magistrate's action was ultra vires as there was no information against A.[1] But there is no restriction as to the source of the information on which a Magistrate can act under this section.[2] Thus the Magistrate can draw up proceedings on the basis of a Police report,[6] or the report of a Subordinate Magistrate[4] or the information given by a private individual.[5] Proceedings can also be drawn up on the basis of information derived from a previous trial of the person proceeded against wherein he was acquitted[6] (See Note 5). But the information on which proceedings are drawn up must be clear and definite so as to afford notice to the person proceeded against of what he is to meet (See Note 10). S. 107, Notes 3—5.

4. Whether proceedings can be initiated on orders of superior Court.—An assault case in which the accused was fined was brought to the notice of the High Court by the complainant preferring a petition to it and the High Court, holding that the accused should have been required to furnish security to keep the peace, directed the Magistrate to summon the accused to show cause why he should not be ordered to furnish security. A majority of the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court held that the High Court had power under S. 297 of the Code of 1872 (now S. 439) to order a Magistrate to take proceedings under S. 491 (now S. 107) and that the proceedings drawn up in obedience to such order were legal.[1] Spankie, J., on the other hand, held that the question of initiating proceedings under this section is entirely within the discretion of the Magistrate.[2] But the High Court may instruct the Magistrate to act under this section and the High Court's decision may be regarded as one mode of "informing" the Magistrate.[3]

5. Information which has already been subject of judicial proceeding whether can be basis of action under this section.—Although S. 403 or S. 494 does not apply to proceedings under this section, yet, on general principles of justice, a person should not be vexed repeatedly with proceedings under it on the same facts as those which formed the foundation for previous proceedings wherein those facts were found insufficient to justify an order for security.[1]

But where the prior order with reference to an "information" is not one finally disposing of the matter, there is no bar to proceedings being started again on the same basis.[2] Thus, where the previous order was only one allowing the police to withdraw their charge sheet under S. 107 with a view to laying a fresh one after omitting some of the persons included therein, proceedings on the basis of the second charge sheet are not barred though both the charge sheets were based on the same facts.[3] Similarly, where a Magistrate on receiving a Police report praying for action against a certain party under S. 107 issues warning notices to both the parties concerned, he does not thereby become functus officio and there is nothing to preclude him from drawing up proceedings under the section thereafter.[4] So also, where a Magistrate on receiving a Police report asking for action under S. 107 against certain persons declines to institute proceedings against some of them and the case is subsequently transferred to another Magistrate, the latter is not precluded from starting proceedings against them on the basis of the same information.[5]

It should also be noted that a criminal prosecution against a person and a security proceeding against him on the same facts are independent and do not exclude each other; and the failure of the criminal prosecution is no bar to the proceeding under this section.[6]

6. Information under section is not "Complaint".—An essential element of a "complaint" as defined in S. 4 (h) is that it must contain an allegation that some person has committed an offence. The essence of an information under this section (S. 107) is that some person is likely to commit a breach of the peace or do any other act specified in the section. Hence an information under this section is not a "complaint" within S. 4 (h).[1] See also Note 14.

7. Person proceeded against whether entitled to copy of information received by Magistrate.—A Magistrate taking action under this section is not bound to disclose the source of the information received by him. Hence the information does not form "part of the record" within S. 548, infra, and the person ordered to show cause why he should not be required to give security is not entitled to a copy of the information on which the order is based.[1]

8. Whether suit for malicious prosecution lies in respect of information given under section.—There is a conflict of decisions as to whether a suit for malicious prosecution is maintainable in respect of proceedings under this section. On the one hand, it has been held by the High Courts of Allahabad[1] and Calcutta[2] that such proceedings are of a quasi criminal nature and can give rise to an action for damages for malicious prosecution. On the other hand, it has been held by the Madras High Court[3] that a suit for malicious prosecution can be brought only when there has been a prosecution for an offence and as proceedings under the section do not involve any such prosecution, they cannot afford a cause of action for a suit for malicious prosecution. S. 107, Notes 8—10.

There is also a conflict of view on the question whether in cases in which information against a person is laid before a Magistrate under this section, but the Magistrate does not see fit to take any action and no preliminary notice to show cause under S. 112 is issued against the person informed against, a suit for malicious prosecution will lie. According to the High Court of Madras the prosecution cannot be deemed to have been started at all and hence, there can be no suit for malicious prosecution.[4] The Calcutta High Court has on the other hand held that a suit for malicious prosecution will lie even in such a case because, according to it, the prosecution commences with the information to the Magistrate.[5]

No suit for malicious prosecution lies in respect of proceedings under this section (as in other cases) if they have not been started without reasonable and probable cause.[6]

9. Whether suit for defamation will lie in respect of information under section.—Statements contained in an information to the Magistrate under this section are absolutely privileged and cannot be made the ground of a suit for defamation against the informant.[1] The privilege extends also to statements made by witnesses to a Police-officer to whom the Magistrate has referred, for investigation and report, the information he has received under this section.[2]

As to whether the Magistrate has power to call for such a report, see Note 14, infra.

10. "Any person is likely to commit a breach of peace or disturb the public tranquillity".—The information on which proceedings can be started under the section should be to the effect that the person to be proceeded against is likely to commit a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity or do any wrongful act that may probably occasion a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity.[1] The information must be of a clear and definite kind directly affecting the person against whom proceedings are to be drawn up and it should disclose tangible facts and details so that it may afford notice to such person of what he is to come prepared to meet.[2] The reason is that the jurisdiction to bind over a person in proceedings commenced under the section arises only when it is proved by definite evidence of facts that he is likely to do any of the acts specified therein.[2-a] Hence, proceedings under the section cannot be commenced on the basis of information which merely contains, vague recitals borrowed from the words of the section.[3] Nor is a mere statement that the person in question is using threats of violence to the opposite party[4] or has committed "diverse acts of oppression"[4-a] sufficient to justify action being taken. Similarly, a police report which merely says that the person sought to be bound over is an overbearing and quarrelsome man and that it is necessary to place him under security is not sufficient to justify proceedings against him.[5]

The mere fact that enmity or ill feeling exists between two parties is no ground for instituting proceedings under this section against one or both of them.[6] Hence, the fact that there has been a series of disputes and litigation between the parties[7] or that the parties are continually bringing false cases against each other[8] or that they had taken different sides in Municipal politics[9] is not sufficient for taking action under this section. Similarly, a party cannot be bound over merely because he has been boycotting another party.[10]

Moreover, where there is a dispute between two parties, all persons who are interested in the dispute and who belong to one side or the other cannot be proceeded against indiscriminately. No action can be taken against any one of them unless the facts show that he is likely to commit a breach of the peace or do any of the other acts mentioned in the section.[11]

Proceedings can be drawn up under the section against persons who are likely to abet the commission of the acts mentioned in it.[12] But a person cannot be bound over to keep the peace merely because his servants, agents or partisans are likely to break the peace or disturb the public tranquillity.[13] It should also be noted that a person cannot escape liability under the section on the ground that the acts imputed to him were committed under the orders of his master.[14]

It is not necessary for taking action under the section to show that he has actually done any of the acts mentioned in it; it is only a likelihood of his doing such acts that is necessary.[14-a] Conversely, the mere fact that a person was likely to commit a breach of peace in the past is no ground for proceeding against him under this section. No action can be taken against him under it unless the facts point to the likelihood of a breach of the peace or disturbance of the public tranquillity in the future.[15] It has even been held that though there may be an apprehension of breach of peace at the time of the commencement of proceedings under the section, if the apprehension ceases subsequently before the final order for security is passed, the proceedings must be cancelled.[16] But where it is likely that a breach of peace will take place in the near future, security should be taken even though the occasion on which ill feelings between the parties first came to ahead has passed away.[17]

In proceedings under this section the Court is entitled to take into consideration the utterance of threats by a party on different occasions, as well as the previous relations of the parties and the antecedent and other existing circumstances.[18] But the mere use of bombastic language does not render the person using it liable to be dealt with under the section.[19] The mere absence of actual overt acts on the part of the person sought to be bound over, during the past six months is not conclusive proof that he is not likely to do any of the acts mentioned in the section.[20] It is not necessary for proceedings being drawn up under the section against any person that it must be shown that he intends to do any definite act[21] although, as already said, the information on which action can be taken should otherwise be of a clear and definite nature. A bare possibility of breach of the peace is not enough to justify proceedings under this section; there must be at least a reasonable probability of such a breach.[22] do any act that may probably occasion a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity is not sufficient to form the basis of a proceeding under this section. It is necessary that the act should be a wrongful one. A rightful act cannot be made the subject of proceedings under this section, even though it may provoke a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity. The section must be used to protect persons exercising their legal rights and not to interfere with such rights.[1] S. 107, Note 11.

The words "wrongful act" in the section mean "an act forbidden by the penal statutes of India or declared to be penal or wrongful by such statutes" and not merely an improper or immoral act.[2] Thus the leading of a procession in violation of a prohibitory order under S. 144,[3] the interference with the worship in a temple of persons entitled to worship there in their own way[4] and the performance of ceremonies invoking the blowing of a conch in a place which is not set apart for the purpose and where no such ceremonies have taken place, with the deliberate intention of insulting a class of Mahommedans[5] are all wrongful acts. See also the following cases.[6]

On the other hand, the bona fide exercise of the right to go in procession along a public road without infringing the law in any way[7] the blowing of a conch in connection with the ceremonial acts of worship in accordance with established usage at a place fixed for the purpose,[8] the killing of a dedicated bull,[9] the killing of cows quietly or secretly in a mosque or in a private house,[10] the exercise by a co-sharer of his lawful rights in improving the joint property even though the other co-sharer objects thereto[11] and the resistance to or protest against the invasion of one's legal rights[12] are not "wrongful acts".

A woman cannot be bound over under this section on the ground that she is likely to commit adultery and that her act may probably provoke the husband to commit a murder. The reason is that under S. 497 of the Penal Code (adultery) the wife cannot be punished for adultery even as an abettor and cannot be said to have committed a wrongful act.[13] See also the following cases.[14]

In proceedings under this section, an attempt must always be made by the Magistrate to ascertain the legal rights of the parties before he binds down one or the other of them. If he finds that the question of the respective rights and obligations of the parties is not easy of solution by him in the proceeding, he ought not to bind down one of the parties alone so as to give an unfair advantage to the other but should bind down both of them.[15]

Before taking action against a person on the ground of his being likely to do a wrongful act which may provoke a breach of the peace, it must be shown that some definite act is in contemplation.[16] Moreover, breach of the peace or the disturbance of public tranquillity must be not merely a possible but a probable result of the wrongful act.[17]

12. Disturbance of public tranquillity.—The words referring to the disturbance of public tranquillity did not occur in the prior Codes. The insertion of these words in the present Code shows that a person who is not likely to commit or provoke a breach of the peace but who is likely to disturb the public tranquillity can also be proceeded against under this section.[1]

13. "If in his opinion there is sufficient ground for proceeding".—This section does not contemplate the drawing up of proceedings automatically whenever information of the kind mentioned in it is received by a Magistrate. Action can be taken only when "in the opinion of the Magistrate there is sufficient ground for proceeding". Thus in each case the Magistrate has to exercise his discretion as to the credibility and sufficiency of the information received by him.[1] If he comes to the conclusion that the apprehension as to breach of peace is unfounded he need not take any action under this section.[2] Thus, though an application under this section is not a "complaint" within the meaning of S. 203 infra, the Magistrate can dismiss it by virtue of his powers under this section itself, if he considers that the application is groundless.[3] But a Magistrate under this section should act in the exercise of his own discretion. He cannot commence proceedings against any one merely because the District Magistrate directed him to do so.[4] Nor can he dismiss an application under this section, merely on the report of a Zaildar.[5]

14. Power of Magistrate to call for report from Police or Subordinate Magistrate.—The procedure provided for in Ss. 202 and 203 infra does not in terms apply to a petition asking for an order for security being passed against a person because such a petition is not a "complaint" within the meaning of those section.[1] But a Magistrate to whom such a petition is addressed is not bound to initiate proceedings in every case. With a view to satisfy himself as to the necessity of issuing process under this section he has the right to test the accuracy of the information received by him before issuing notice to the person informed against. For this purpose, the Magistrate has inherent power to refer the matter to the Police[2] or to a Subordinate Magistrate,[3] for investigation or enquiry and report, before he makes up his mind as to whether notice must issue or not.

15. May require him to show cause.—An order directing a person to enter into a bond for keeping the peace is illegal if he was not summoned to show cause why such an order should not be passed against him.[1]

16. Burden of proof.—The fact that a person under this section is required to 'show cause' why he should not be ordered to give security for keeping the peace does not imply that in the subsequent enquiry which is held under S. 117 before a final order is passed, the burden of proving his innocence lies on the party who is required to show cause. As in all other criminal cases, the burden of proof is on the prosecution and not the person proceeded against.[1]

17. "With or without sureties".—In case of landed proprietors required to give security for keeping the peace their personal security should be considered sufficient.[1]

18. Who can take proceedings under section.—Proceedings under the section can be commenced only by a Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate, Sub-Divisional Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class. Any other Magistrate who may consider such proceedings necessary against any person may follow the procedure laid down in sub-S. (3) if the conditions mentioned therein are present, or may communicate to any Magistrate who is empowered to start proceedings, the information which shows the desirability of commencing such proceedings.

As to who can take proceedings in the case of European British subjects see notes to S. 443, infra.

19. Territorial jurisdiction.—Sub-S. (2) lays down the rule as to the territorial jurisdiction of Magistrates under this section. According to it, the District Magistrate[1] and the Chief Presidency Magistrate have jurisdiction where either the person proceeded against or the place where the breach of the peace or disturbance of the public tranquillity is apprehended to take place is within the local limits of their jurisdiction. Other Magistrates empowered to act under the section can do so only if both the place where the breach of peace or disturbance of public tranquillity is apprehended and the person proceeded against are within the local limits of their jurisdiction.[2] A Magistrate of this class cannot start proceedings against a person who is not within his jurisdiction even on the express direction of the District Magistrate to do so.[3] A Magistrate to whom no local area has been allotted under S. 12, ante has jurisdiction throughout the district.[4] Where the territorial jurisdiction of the Magistrate to take proceedings under this section is challenged it is incumbent upon him to enter into the matter and decide it after taking evidence if necessary, before proceeding further.[5]

There is a conflict of decisions as to the effect of the initiation of proceedings in disregard of the provisions of sub-S. (2). According to the High Courts of Madras[6] and Calcutta[7] the proceedings in such a case are illegal and ultra vires; but according to the Allahabad High Court they are only irregularities which are curable under S. 537 post.[8]

The term "is" with reference to the person informed against in this subsection does not denote permanent or habitual residence. Proceedings can be taken against a person who at the time that they are instituted is within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate although his residence may be outside, such jurisdiction.[9] But the presence within the Magistrate's jurisdiction must be a voluntary one. Thus, presence by virtue of detention in custody[10] or in obedience to summons[11] is not enough.

20. Transfer of proceedings under section to another Magistrate for disposal.—Where proceedings under this section have been initiated by a Magistrate having local jurisdiction to do so, the District Magistrate can transfer them to any other Magistrate who is subordinate to him and who, though lacking territorial jurisdiction, is otherwise competent to complete the proceedings.[1] But where proceedings have not been initiated at all but only an information under the section has been received, the case cannot be transferred to another Magistrate for disposal.[2] The object of sub-S. (2) of this section is to restrict only the initiation of proceedings against persons residing out of the jurisdiction of the District Magistrate and not to restrict his power to transfer such proceedings, after initiation, to a Subordinate Magistrate.[3]

21. Sub-Sections 3 and 4.—The Magistrate to whom a person is sent under sub-S. (3) must go through all the procedure laid down in Ss. 112 to 118 before he can bind down the person for keeping the peace.[1] Sub-S. (4) confers jurisdiction on a Magistrate to detain only a person sent to him under sub-S. (3); he cannot detain any other person though he may be before the Court.[2]

22. Revision.—The High Court seldom interferes in the preliminary stage with the discretion of the Magistrate in taking action under the preventive sections of the Code,[1-a] but when the material on which the orders are based are clearly insufficient to support them, the High Court will interfere.[1] When an application under this section is dismissed, further enquiry cannot be ordered under S. 436 as the application under this section is not a "complaint" within S. 436.[2] See also the undermentioned case[3] and Note 4, supra.

What amounts to promoting enmity between classes. See Note 7.

1. Legislative changes.—This section is entirely new and was not found in the 1861, 1872 or 1882 Codes.

By S. 17 of the Act XVIII of 1923 (Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act), after the words "in writing", the words "in any other manner intentionally" and after the words "such Magistrate" the words "if in his opinion there is sufficient ground for proceeding" were inserted.

And for the words "or printed or published" the words "and edited printed and published" were substituted.

After the figures 1867, the words "with reference to any matter contained in such publication" were added.

2. Scope and object of the section.—Sections 106 and 107 deal with the power to require security to keep the peace. This and the next two sections deal with the power to take security for good behaviour. These sections are not intended to provide for punishment of offences already committed,[1] but to prevent the commission of offences. In other words they embody preventive and not punitive provisions of law.[2]

Proceedings under this section are not intended to be taken so as to avoid the trouble and possible refusal of the Government to launch prosecutions under Ss. 153-A or 124-A of the Penal Code.[3] or attempts to disseminate any such matter as is referred to in the section.[1] For this purpose it is necessary to show that the person proceeded against was connected with the dissemination of the matter in question. The mere writing of the matter disseminated or the authorship thereof is not sufficient to bring a person under this section.[2] Where persons proceeded against were merely volunteers and said to have taken part in parades, drills, and route marches and there was no evidence of dissemination of seditious matter by them, an order under this section was held not justified.[3] S. 108, Notes 3—7.

4. Mode of dissemination.—Under the section as it stood before the amendment of 1923, the section applied to disseminations of seditious matter "either orally or in writing". The words "or in any other manner intentionally" were added by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act of 1923. The dissemination of the offending matter need not necessarily now be, either oral or in writing. It may be, by other means, as for instance, by gramophone records.[1]

5. The dissemination must be intentional.—The dissemination or attempt to disseminate must be intentional. Innocent persons who disseminate matters covered by this section, such as boys who handle newspapers without knowing the contents, and persons who are merely ignorant tools in the hands of others cannot be proceeded against under this section.[1]

6. Seditious Matter—Cl. (a).—It is essential for the applicability of Cl. (a) that the matter disseminated must be shown to be seditious.[1]

The advocacy of "Home Rule for India" or "Swaraj" with the object of obtaining for Indians, an increased and gradually increasing share of political authority,[2] or the mere preaching of the boycott of British Goods[3] or speeches and agitation, the trend of which is mainly to redress a particular grievance such as an insult of the religious sentiments of the students of a College[4] are not seditious matters, within the meaning of the section.

7. Promoting enmity between classes.—Cl. (b).—To sustain an order under Cl. (b), it must be shown first that the matter disseminated is one "the publication of which is punishable under S. 153-A" and secondly that the dissemination was done intentionally. S. 153-A of the Penal Code says in effect that the publication of matter is punishable, if by such publication the person publishing is making a successful or unsuccessful attempt to promote enmity: matter "the publication of which is punishable under S. 153-A" is therefore matter which is the vehicle of an attempt to promote enmity. If there is no such attempt to promote enmity, the mere fact that the matter may have a tendency to promote enmity is not enough to proceed against a person under this section.[1]

The Chief Court of Lower Burma has held in the undermentioned case[2] that this section will not apply unless the disseminator himself intended to provoke feelings of enmity or hatred between communities. It is submitted that this view is not correct. To accept it would mean that only persons who themselves would be liable to punishment under S. 153-A, can be proceeded against under this section.

8. "If in his opinion there is sufficient ground for proceeding".—Before requiring a person to show cause why security should not be required of him under this section, the Magistrate must satisfy himself, that there is sufficient ground for his acting on the information received, or in other words, that a prima facie case is made out on the materials before him. The Magistrate should not act upon any and every information.[1] In order that a person may be bound over under this section for sedition it must be shown that the person concerned is in the habit of intentionally disseminating or intends to disseminate seditious matters: in other words it must be shown that there is danger of his continuing the seditious activities unless he is prevented from doing so under this section.[2] The test is whether there is any fear or probability of the repetition of the offence.[3]

Thus where it was proved against the person proceeded against that he had given only once certain notices to a peon to be affixed in public, the contents of which were punishable under S. 153-A,[4] or where all that was proved was that he had been joining the processions and meetings arranged by an unlawful association in the organizing of which he had no hand and that out of four speeches made by him at such meetings three were not seditious[5] it was held that a resort to this section was not justified.

9. Printer or Publisher.—In the case of the printer or keeper of the press, although it must be assumed, that by printing, the obnoxious matter, he abets the dissemination, still in order to make him liable under this section the knowledge of the contents will have to be proved against him for such a presumption does not ordinarily arise from the ordinary course of business in a big press.[1]

But as regards the publisher no such proof is necessary and he will be liable because as publisher he must be presumed to have knowledge of the contents and his publishing is dissemination or at least an abetment of the same.[2]

When Magistrate may require security for good behaviour for six months.

295. Whenever it shall appear to the Magistrate of the District or to an Officer exercising the powers of a Magistrate that any person is lurking within his jurisdiction not having any ostensible means of subsistence, or who cannot give a satisfactory account of himself, it shall be competent to such Magistrate or other Officer as aforesaid to require security for the good behaviour of such person for a period not exceeding six months.

1. Legislative Changes.—

S. 109, Notes 1—5.

In the 1861 and 1872 Codes the word "lurking" was used, instead of the words "taking precautions to conceal his presence"; and the maximum period of security was six months.

Under the Code of 1882 the maximum period of security was raised to one year thus bringing it in accord with Ss. 107 and 108.

In 1898, the word 'an' before the word 'offence' was changed into 'any'.

2. Scope and object of the section.—This section deals with proceedings against persons, who, in English Law, would be classed as rogues and vagabonds.[1] The object of the section is to frustrate the criminal designs of such persons before they are carried out.[2] The section is not intended for taking security from persons suspected of having committed a particular offence.[3] Nor is it meant to be used as a means of getting every suspected habitual offender and village loafer confined in jail, and thus saving trouble to the Police and the village authorities. It is only when the ordinary means of detection and prevention of crime and ensuring good behaviour have been adopted and have failed, that resort to the special means provided by this and the next section is justifiable.[4]

Under Ss. 106—108, infra, the bond may be "'with or without" sureties. But under this and the next section, the bond must always be with sureties.

3. Simultaneous proceedings under Ss. 109 and 110 against same person.—See S. 110, infra.

4. Simultaneous proceedings for substantive offence as well as under this section.—Where a person is tried and convicted of an offence, in respect of a particular incident, he cannot be proceeded against under this section also for the same incident. Thus, when a person, who was found riding a stolen camel was challenged by the police and on his being unable to give a satisfactory account of himself, was arrested and convicted under S. 411 of the Penal Code, simultaneous proceedings under this section for the same act were held not justified.[1]

5. "Is taking precautions to conceal his presence within.....jurisdiction"—Cl. (a).—There is a difference of opinion as to the correct interpretation of these words. In the undermentioned decisions of the High Court of Allahabad it was held that the words "within the local limits of such Magistrate's jurisdiction" qualified the word "presence", that, in order that Cl. (a) might apply, there must be a concealment of the fact that he is within the Magistrate's jurisdiction and that therefore, if the presence within the Magistrate's jurisdiction is well known an attempt to conceal the presence at a particular spot or at a particular time is not within the applicability of Cl. (a).[1]

Thus In Emperor v. Bhairon[2] where certain persons, well known residents of village A, were found in the dark outside a house in village B (A and B being both within the Magistrate's jurisdiction) with house-breaking implements and when challenged by the Police they ran away, it was held that Cl. (a) did not apply. The same view has been adopted by the High Courts of Calcutta[3] and Patna.[4] In Gagan Chandra De v. Emperor,[5] Rankin, C. J., observed as follows:—"The idea is that someone may be taking precaution to conceal himself within the local limits of the Magistrate's jurisdiction, not to conceal himself as one who hides from a Policeman but to conceal the fact of his infesting the Magistrate's jurisdiction, and, in that class of cases, if there is reason to believe that this is a precaution taken with a view to commit an offence; the Magistrate can require him to give security. It is reasonable in that view that Cl. (a) and Cl. (b) should be found together, treating a man who has no ostensible means of subsistence and cannot give satisfactory account of himself as a person of the same kind as a person trying to escape notice and to inhabit the locality without his presence in the locality becoming known, and doing this for the purpose of committing an offence". In Emperor v. Phuchai[6] which was a decision by a Bench of five Judges of the High Court of Allahabad, the majority of the Judges came to the conclusion that a person may come within Cl. (a) even if the residence within the local limits of the Magistrate's jurisdiction was well known, thus overruling the previous decisions of that Court. According to Sulaiman, C. J., the words "within the local limits of the Magistrate's jurisdiction" modify the word 'conceal' so that if the concealment is to be effected within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate, Cl. (a) will apply even though the residence within jurisdiction is well known. According to Weir and Kendall, JJ., those words modify the words "is taking precautions" so that if the precautions are taken within jurisdiction, Cl. (a) applies. Banerji and Boys, JJ., adhered to the view expressed in Bhairon's case. The view of the majority in the above Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court was also followed by the Patna High Court in a later decision.[7]

The words "is taking" in the clause mean "has taken" or "has been taking" and apply to a person who has been arrested by the police under S. 55 although in such a case it cannot be said that at the time of his being produced before the Magistrate he is taking precautions to conceal his presence.[8]

It is not necessary to bring a case within the section that the person proceeded against should have followed a continuous course of conduct in taking precautions to conceal his presence. Even a single attempt at concealment may be enough.[9]

S. 109, Notes 6—7.

6. Concealment—Meaning of.—In order that Cl. (a) might apply, the person proceeded against must have taken precautions to conceal his presence. Concealing a man's presence is not identical with his concealing himself and a man may not conceal his presence at a place and yet may conceal his identity.[1] Thus giving out false names is concealment of the identity of the individuals concerned but is not necessarily a concealment of their presence.[2] But the giving out of false name by a man, in conjunction with other circumstances, for example, when he disguises himself or hides himself, or when it is his duty to disclose his identity, or absence from residence, as in the case of criminals ordered to notify their residence under S. 565 of the Code, may amount to "concealing his presence".[3] Again there can be no concealment of a man's presence where he gives true information as to his name and address when asked.[4] Thus it has been held that a man who is deliberately preparing to commit a burglary and when challenged by the Police admits his intention, cannot be said to be concealing his presence and cannot be dealt with under this section.[5] Where accused requested others not to mention their business to others, it does not imply that they are taking precautions to conceal their presence; the fact that accused were seated near a village well does not necessarily justify the inference that they were taking precautions to conceal their presence; nor would the fact that they refused to give their names to an ordinary person justify such an inference.[6]

There is a difference of opinion as to whether a concealment, in order to come within the section should be continuous. According to the High Court of Calcutta the concealment must be continuous and Cl. (a) does not apply to a momentary effort at concealment to avoid detection or arrest.[7] Passing under a false name or taking precautions to conceal one's presence or identity at a place amounting to a continuous course of conduct is what is meant by the clause.[8] In the undermentioned case it was even held that a person brought under arrest cannot be proceeded against under this section,[9] though this opinion has not been followed in any other decision. According to the High Courts of Allahabad and Patna no time-limit can be placed on the taking of precautions and in every case it would be a question of fact.[10] It is submitted that the latter view is correct.

7. "With a view to commit an offence".—The object of the concealment must be with a view to committing some offence. Concealment with a view to avoid observation or arrest[1] or a mere disinclination to the society of the police and endeavouring to avoid them by running away on their approach[2] does not by itself show that the person concealing himself was doing so with a view to commit an offence. Thus where persons are accosted by the police while going away from the village and give false names in the first instance and then give the correct names, that, by itself, will not amount to taking precautions with a view to commit an offence.[3] Similarly, where A went about in Madras under an alias alleging falsely that he was going in for the B. A. Examination, it was held that his conduct showed a desire to conceal the fact of his presence in Madras, but that in the absence of proof of intention to commit an offence he could not be called upon to furnish security under this section.[4] In the undermentioned case[5] it was held that the fact that the accused took precautions to conceal his presence within jurisdiction, together with the fact that he ran away on the approach of the police warranted the inference that he was taking the precautions with a view to commit an offence. Similarly, a person who gives a false name and delivers letters secretly containing incitement to commit crime or demanding money for the means of committing crime is within Cl. (a).[6] The clause is, however, one which should be used with proper discretion and was never intended to apply to a person merely found talking at night time with bad characters in a place which is open to the public.[7]

Where a person falsely personates another with a view to commit an offence by such personation he does not come within this section the reasons being that his object is to commit an offence by false personation and not by concealing his presence.[8]

8. "Who has no ostensible means of subsistence"—Cl. (b).—Merely to be penniless or out of work is not an offence. Many an honest man will find himself in either predicament. So it is not the object of the law that such people should be put on security.[1] Unless, therefore, there is reasonable ground for suspecting, that a person, who is unable to prove the source of his livelihood, is sustaining himself by dishonest means, he will not come under the purview of this section.[2] Further under S. 118 infra, the Magistrate has to consider, whether the order for security is really necessary either for keeping the peace or for maintaining good behaviour, which is a matter for Magistrate's judicial discretion.[3] Thus if a cooly could not show any immediate work, it does not mean, he has no ostensible means of livelihood.[4] As long as, a young man out of employment is staying in his father's house and that father is a man of substance and able, if necessary, to support him, he cannot be said to be in want of ostensible means of subsistence.[5] The mere fact, that a person belongs to a wandering tribe,[6] or that he is a gambler or opium smoker[7] or that he does not work at present and was previously convicted of bad livelihood[8] or that he has no means of subsistence except through a play of ring game which by itself is not an offence[9] is not a sufficient ground for demanding security under this section.

9. "Who cannot give a satisfactory account of himself"—Cl. (b).— There is a conflict of opinion as to the interpretation of these words also. On the one hand it has been held that the words do not mean "explain what he was doing" or "explain his conduct" at any particular time or place but mean an explanation of his general course of conduct as distinct from a momentary behaviour.[1] Thus according to this view if a man proves that he is a resident of the neighbourhood and is a man of substance; he must be said to be able to give a satisfactory account of himself although he is not able or does not give any convincing explanation why on a particular night he was found prowling about in a lonely place.[2] On the other hand it has been held that though a man cannot be called upon to explain how he spends his leisure, if he is caught spending a portion of that leisure in a manner giving rise to grave suspicion and can give no account of the incident he cannot be said to be able to give a satisfactory account of himself. According to this view if a house-holder catches a man in his garden in the middle of the night armed with a jemmy and he cannot or will not explain what he was doing at that hour, in that place, he must be held to be "unable to give a satisfactory account of himself" and cannot escape by saying that he is a well-known respectable member of the society.[3] In the undermentioned case[4] it was held that the words mean that the person proceeded against has to satisfactorily account for his presence within the limits of the Magistrate's jurisdiction. According to this view if a person is present within such limits to which he does not belong and there are circumstances justifying a suspicion that he is not there for an innocent purpose, he has got to explain his presence.

S. 109, Notes 9—12.

Where the explanation, if true, is consistent with the circumstances it must be held that a satisfactory account has been given.[5] Where A fled to avoid an arrest and after the warrant was withdrawn, he came back to his house and kept himself in seclusion to avoid curious inquiries, it was held that he gave a satisfactory account of himself.[6] "The greatest criminal in the world is not liable to be questioned as to his presence in his own house unless there is some outstanding charges against him".[7]

But where a person was found in a district other than his own and in the house of a dangerous political conspirator, and gave an account which was, in the main false, it was held that he did not give a satisfactory account of himself.[8]

10. What Magistrate can act under this section.—It has been held by Sulaiman, C. J., in Emperor v. Phuchai[1] that in order to give jurisdiction to a Magistrate to act under Cl. (a) of the section it is necessary that the concealment should have been effected within the local limits of his jurisdiction. Weir and Kendall, JJ., in the same case, have on the other hand held that the words "within the local limits of such Magistrate's jurisdiction" modify the words "is taking precautions" thus seeming to suggest that it is the Magistrate within whose jurisdiction the precautions are taken that has power to proceed under Cl. (a).

In order to give jurisdiction to the Magistrate under Cl. (b) of the section it is, however, not necessary that the person sought to be proceeded against should have his residence within the jurisdiction of such Magistrate. It is enough if the person proceeded against is found within such jurisdiction.[2] It is immaterial also how the accused came within such jurisdiction i.e., whether of his own accord or whether under an arrest legal or illegal.[3] Where the account a person gives of his presence within the limits of a particular Magistrate's jurisdiction is satisfactory, he cannot be called upon by such Magistrate to give an account of his presence in another Magistrate's jurisdiction.[4]

11. Discretion of Magistrate.—The words "such Magistrate may" show that it is in the discretion of the Magistrate to proceed or not against a person under this section. In exercising such discretion care should be taken to see that the stringent provisions of the section are not abused and made an engine of oppression.[1]

12. Joint Enquiry.—See S. 117, Cl. 5, infra.

13. Revision.—The question whether the circumstances of a case are suspicious is mainly a question of fact, and if a Magistrate is satisfied that the circumstances in which a person was found are not suspicious and that there is no need for him to call upon such person to give security under this section, the High Court will rarely interfere with his decision.[1] S. 109, Note 13.

may, in manner hereinbefore provided, require such person to show cause why he should not be ordered to execute a bond, with sureties, for his good behaviour for such period not exceeding three years as the Magistrate thinks fit to fix.

When Magistrate may require security for good behaviour for one year.

505. Whenever it appears to such Magistrate, from the evidence as to general character adduced before him, that any person is by repute a robber, house-breaker, or thief, or a receiver of stolen property, knowing the same to have been stolen, or of notoriously bad livelihood, or is a dangerous character, such Magistrate may require similar security for the good behaviour of such person for a period not exceeding one year.

Procedure where security required for more than one year.

506. Whenever it appears to such Magistrate, from the evidence as to general character adduced before him, that any person is by habit a robber, house-breaker, or thief, or a receiver of a stolen property, knowing the same to have been stolen, or of a character so desperate and dangerous as to render his release without security, at the expiration of the limited period of one year, hazardous to the community, he shall record his opinion to that effect, with an order specifying the amount of security which should, in his judgment, be required from such person, as well as the number, character, and class of sureties, and the period not exceeding three years, for which the sureties should be responsible for such person's good behaviour; and if such person does not comply with the order, the Magistrate shall issue a warrant directing his detention pending the orders of the Court of Session.

When Magistrate may require security for good behaviour for one year.

296. Whenever it shall appear to such Magistrate or other Officer as aforesaid from the evidence as to general character adduced before him, that any person is by repute a robber, house-breaker, or thief, or a receiver of stolen property knowing the same to have been stolen, or of notoriously bad livelihood, it shall be competent to such Magistrate or other Officer as aforesaid to require security for the good behaviour of such person for a period not exceeding one year.

How to proceed in cases beyond one year.

297. Whenever it shall appear to such Magistrate or other Officer as aforesaid from the evidence as to general character adduced before him, that any person is by habit a robber, house-breaker, or thief, or a receiver of stolen property knowing the same to have been stolen, or of a character so desperate and dangerous as to render his release, without security, at the expiration of the limited period of one year, hazardous to the community, the Magistrate or other Officer as aforesaid shall record his opinion to that effect, with an order specifying the amount of security which should, in his judgment, be required from such person, as well as the number of sureties, and the period, not exceeding three years, for which the sureties should be responsible for such person's good behaviour.

1. Legislative changes.--

The following changes were introduced by the Amending Act, XVIII of 1923:--

(1) The words 'or forger' have been newly added in Cl. (a). As to the effect of the addition, see Note 10, infra.

(2) Clause (d) has been remodelled and re-enacted with certain additions so as to make its scope wider and include certain other offences.

2. Scope and object of the section.—The object of the section is preventive and not punitive, and is not intended as a punishment for past offences.[1] It is aimed at protecting society from dangerous characters against the perpetration of crimes by placing them under such substantial but not excessive security as would prevent them from resorting to evil courses.[2] Its object is not to fill the jails with bad characters but to bring reasonable pressure to bear on such persons to respect the law.[3] The section is not intended to provide an indirect means of securing conviction for the police who have failed in the prosecution of a charge for a substantive offence,[4] or who are afraid that a prosecution for a substantive offence is likely to fail.[4-a] Where proceedings under this section follow soon after discharge or an acquittal for a substantive offence, the Court must be satisfied that such proceedings were not instituted with a view to get a person punished indirectly and the Court should scrutinise the evidence with the greatest care and see that the same materials and evidence which formed the basis of the previous charge do not also form the basis of the security proceedings.[5]

The preventive jurisdiction with which the Magistrate is vested under this section serves as a powerful means to secure the interests of the community from injury at the hands of hardened offenders. The powers under this section should however be exercised with caution and discretion.[6] The security law is a hard law and ought not to be used as an engine of oppression and for oppressive purposes.[7] Where proceedings under this section are taken against a person after his release from jail in pursuance of a sentence for a substantive offence or for failure to furnish security in pursuance of a prior order under this section the Court should be careful to see that he has had sufficient locus penitentiae to reform himself. It is not fair to run a man in as a budmash before he has had sufficient opportunity of showing that he is willing to adopt an honest course of livelihood.[8]

Where a Magistrate specified under this section received information that a person within the local limits of his jurisdiction falls under one or other of the six categories mentioned in the section, he should pass a preliminary order under S. 112, infra charging him under one or other of the clauses of this section, issue a summons or a warrant to him as under S. 114, and then hold a judicial enquiry as to the truth or otherwise of the information on which he has taken action.[9] Proceedings under this section are judicial and not executive,[10] and the Court cannot without any inquiry and following the appropriate proceedings prescribed therefor order a person to furnish security. Thus, the Court cannot while sentencing a man to conviction for a substantive offence direct him to furnish security after his release without following the procedure prescribed in this chapter.[11] Similarly a District Magistrate cannot, upon the receipt of a police report that a person is an undesirable man, order him to leave the town at once on pain of being prosecuted as a bad character.[12]

3. Registration under Criminal Tribes Act, III of 1911—Whether constitutes a bar to proceedings under this section.—It is not illegal to take proceedings under this section against persons already registered under S. 4 and other sections of the Criminal Tribes Act, III of 1911. is obtained over a person by registering him as a member of the criminal tribes is sufficient to prevent him from committing many of the acts for which preventive action under Chapter VIII of the Code may be necessary, he has, notwithstanding such control, enough liberty left in him to pursue a career of crime bringing him within Cls. (a) to (e) of this section or being in himself dangerous to society within the meaning of Cl. (f). It depends on the facts and circumstances of each case whether security should be demanded under this section also. In such cases, it is important to see the conduct of the person sought to be proceeded against subsequent to his registration under the Criminal Tribes Act.[1]

4. Proceedings under Ss. 109 and 110.—The two Ss. 109 and 110 contemplate different classes of cases. Where a person is amenable under S. 109, he can hardly be amenable under this section also. Hence a person cannot be ordered to be bound over in one and the same proceedings and on the same materials both under S. 109 and this section, especially where the preliminary order under S. 112 is with regard to S. 110.[1]

An order under this section cannot be passed while an order under S. 109 is in force.[2]

A person called upon to give security under S. 109 and a person called upon to give security under S. 110 cannot be dealt with together in one and the same inquiry.[3]

5. Proceedings under Ss. 107 and 110.—Where a Magistrate takes proceedings under this section and issues notice for a charge under Cl. (e) of this section, he cannot, after inquiry, pass an order for security under S. 107 without issuing a fresh notice under S. 112. The facts to be proved under Cl. (e) of this section and those to be proved under S. 107 are different.[1] Similarly, where notice is issued to show cause why a person should not be bound over to keep the peace under S. 107, he cannot be directed after inquiry to execute a bond for good behaviour under this section.[2] But, where after issuing summons under S. 107, the Magistrate took proceedings under this section and the evidence was recorded at length and the proper procedure as to trial of warrant cases was followed, and there was no prejudice to the parties, it was held to be a mere irregularity which was cured by the provisions of S. 537.[3]

S. 110, Notes 5-a—7.

5-a. Proceedings under Ss. 108 and 110.—The mere fact that the facts of a case fall within the purview of S. 108 does not make this section inapplicable.[1]

6. Section 401, I.P.C., and S. 110.—Section 401 of the Penal Code provides for the punishment of persons belonging to a wandering or other gang of persons associated together for the purpose of habitually committing theft or robbery. An order under this section is only preventive and is not a punishment for any offence and hence does not bar a prosecution for the substantive offence under S. 401 of the Penal Code.[1]

7. "Receives information".—Before a Magistrate can take action under this section he should have information that the person sought to be proceeded against is a habitual offender coming under one or other of the six clauses mentioned in the section.[1] There is, however, no limitation as to the nature of the information to be received[2] or as to the source from which it may be derived.[3] Nor is any quantum of information a necessary condition for the Magistrate to take action.[4] If a Magistrate receives information of the barest kind to the effect that a person is a habitual thief, it is within his powers to take action under the section and the legality of the action cannot be questioned though undoubtedly a prudent Magistrate might not consider information sufficient to cause him to take action under the preventive sections unless it gave substantial details against the person in question.[5] The Magistrate is bound to enquire judicially into the truth of the information under S. 117 and should exercise a proper discretion and see that the information is precise and proper.[6] The Magistrate can if he thinks fit take information on oath before proceeding under S. 112.[7] Where a memorial was sent by the tenants of a Zamindar alleging several acts against him and the report of the Sub-Divisional Officer thereon did not substantiate the allegations, it was held that the District Magistrate was not justified in taking proceedings on the basis of the same.[8] Similarly, a mere petition not based on any complaint or deposition given on solemn affirmation which merely stated that the Tipperah Rajah's people were intimidating the ryots was held not to constitute credible information upon which action could be taken.[9]

The information on which the Magistrate institutes proceedings cannot be used as evidence against the person sought to be bound over.[10]

8. "Within the local limits of his jurisdiction".—The section requires that the person proceeded against should be within the local limits of the Magistrate's jurisdiction at the time when proceedings are taken against him. Otherwise, the Magistrate cannot take action under this section.[1] Thus, where proceedings under this section were instituted against A in Barisal District while he was in jail at Calcutta on the date of the making of the report by the police on which report the proceedings were founded it was held that A was not within the limits of the jurisdiction of the Magistrate at Barisal District and therefore he had no jurisdiction to institute the proceedings.[2]

The expression "within the local limits" is not used in the sense of residing within the jurisdiction but in a literal and physical sense of being within the territorial limits. The person proceeded against need not therefore be a permanent resident within the local limits of the Magistrate's jurisdiction. It is sufficient if he is actually present within such limits when proceedings are taken.[3] A Magistrate can thus take action under this section against a person who resides outside his jurisdiction but is found within the limits of his jurisdiction;[4] it is sufficient to give the Magistrate jurisdiction if the evil habits of the person proceeded against are practised and a evil reputation acquired within the local limits of the jurisdiction.[5] Even where the person is undergoing imprisonment within the local limits of the Magistrate's jurisdiction[6] or is arrested outside his jurisdiction and brought before him,[7] it has been held that the Magistrate can take proceedings against him. But the section does not enable the police to arrest and get a person within the local limits for the purpose of giving jurisdiction to a particular Magistrate.[8]

9. General jurisdiction of the Magistrate.—The section empowers only the Magistrates mentioned therein to deal with cases arising thereunder. Orders made by any other Magistrate are invalid and without jurisdiction.[1] A First Class Magistrate not specially empowered under this section cannot exercise jurisdiction under it.[2]

In the case cited below[3] it was held that the proceedings under this section should be disposed of by the Magistrate by whom they were initiated and consequently a First Class Magistrate before whom proceedings under this section were initiated could not after recording evidence send up the proceedings to the District Magistrate and the latter could not act under S. 27 of the Bombay Regulation XII of 1827 and place restrictions upon the liberty of the accused.

10. Is by habit a robber, thief, etc., Cl. (a).—To sustain a charge under Cl. (a), the person proceeded against must be proved to be by habit a robber, housebreaker, thief or forger.[1] The word "habit" implies a tendency or capacity resulting from the repetition of the same acts. It implies frequent practice or use and connotes depravity of character as evidenced by the frequent repetition or commission of offences referred to in the section.[2] It should not be restricted to mean inclination by nature. It means a persistence in doing an act, a fact which is capable of proof by adducing evidence of the commission of a number of similar acts.[3] Habit has to be proved by aggregate of facts and mere suspicion or complicity in isolated offences is not evidence of habit, unless there is direct evidence to establish his complicity in such cases as to lead to a reasonable and definite conclusion that he is a habitual thief. The evidence must be specific and relate to particular instances within the knowledge of witnesses.[4]

By habitual thief or robber is meant a person who has committed thefts and robberies in the past and is ready to commit them again whenever opportunity occurs.[5] The mere fact that a man was a bad character and had been sent to jail or was once convicted of theft[6] or that he associated with a thief or a bad character[7] or that a police-officer gave it as his opinion that he was a habitual thief[8] was held not to be sufficient for binding over a person under this clause. Where the charge against a person is that he is a habitual robber the fact that he gathers bad characters at his house does not go far enough to be in itself relevant. It would be necessary to show that the bad characters were robbers or have been gathered there for the purpose of committing robbery or theft.[9] Where the only evidence against a person was that he was found hiding himself in a bush and when his person was searched certain articles not claimed by him to be his own, were found upon him, and he was not charged with any offence in respect of those articles, it was held that he was not a habitual offender within the meaning of this clause.[10] The fact that a person is by habit thief, robber, etc.; can be proved by the evidence of general repute. As to what is general repute and for a further discussion of the admissibility of evidence of general repute, see Note 7 under S. 117, infra.

It may be noted that the section does not refer to a person who is by habit a dacoit. The reason is that being a member of a gang of dacoits is a substantive offence punishable under S. 401 of the Penal Code. Hence, where notice was issued to four persons stating that they formed a habitual gang for committing robbery it was held that they became members of a gang of dacoits and that no action could be taken under this section.[11]

Habitual forger.—The words 'or forger' in this clause have been newly added by the amending Act, XVIII of 1923. Prior to such amendment it was held that a habitual forger should not be proceeded against under this section. But this view is no longer law under the present section.[12]

11. Habitual receiver of stolen property, Cl. (b).—To substantiate a charge under this clause, the fact that the person proceeded against is a habitual receiver of stolen property knowing the same to be stolen, has to be proved. This may be proved by evidence of general repute. No specific offence need be proved.[1] Mere rumours and suspicions are not however enough to substantiate a charge under this clause.[2] Where the persons proceeded against belonged to a class of people called Mewatis who were considered to be persons occupying themselves in receiving stolen property and offences of similar nature and that the villagers were in considerable terror of the Mewatis, it was held that this was not sufficient to sustain a charge under this clause without there being any tangible evidence that they were receivers of stolen property.[3]

12. Habitually protects or harbours thieves, etc., Cl. (c).—This clause is designed to meet the cases of professional receivers of stolen property who assist the thief after theft by relieving him and encouraging him, protecting him from discovery and arrest and helping him to dispose of his stolen property.

The acts which amount to harbouring must be done with the intention of screening the offender from legal punishment or of preventing him from being apprehended. Where a man, from motives of humanity and without any intention of enabling the fugitive to escape from justice, gives him food and surgical assistance while he was wounded, it has been held that he is not liable to be bound over under this clause.[1] The fact that a landlord has tenants of bad character, that he lends money or paddy to them whenever they are in difficulties because they are his tenants, and that he settles disputes between two men, one of whom is a thief and the other is not, is not also sufficient to make him liable under this clause.[2] Nor is the mere association with a gang of dacoits or the failure to oppose them or give assistance to the police when the gang settled in the neighbourhood, sufficient to justify action under this clause.[3]

The manager of a public shrine which does not belong to him and is not under his exclusive control and which is also open to the public cannot be called upon to furnish security under this clause, although some thieves have been arrested in the shrine on several occasions and it is generally used as a gambling resort visited by bad characters, inasmuchas, the shrine is not his house and he cannot be said to harbour thieves.[4] Similarly, it has been held that the mere fact that the person proceeded against derived his subsistence from keeping prostitutes in his house although sometimes thieves visited his house was not a sufficient ground to justify an action under this clause.[5] Where the evidence amounted to nothing more than that some persons said to be of bad character had been seen on occasions at the Kothar where the accused did his work, it was held that the Court was not justified in holding that the accused habitually protected and harboured thieves.[6] Where thieves have been living with B, his son A cannot be held guilty of harbouring them.[6-a]

As in the foregoing clauses it is necessary to prove that the person proceeded against is by habit protector or harbourer of thieves. Isolated cases are not sufficient to prove habit or character. One or two cases may not be sufficient, but a number of similar incidents cease to be isolated facts and become evidence of habit and character. How many facts have to be proved to enable the Court to draw a reasonable inference of habit cannot be laid down by any hard and fast rule; it depends on the facts and circumstances of each case.[7]

A person cannot be called upon to give security under this clause for harbouring dacoits. Such a person should be dealt with under S. 216-A of the Penal Code for a substantive offence.[8]

13. Habitual offender—Cl. (d).—Cl. (d) prescribes certain offences the habitual commission or the abetment of which or the attempt to commit which is a ground for taking action under this section. For instance, where a person repeatedly and persistently committed acts of extortion which consisted of compelling the merchants to sign agreements not to import foreign cloth by resort to picketting and the levying of fines, and by also resorting to picketting in the case of merchants who traded in such cloths it was held that he was liable to be bound over under this clause.[1] This clause does not apply to a person who has a reputation of habitually bringing false claims in a Civil Court though such a person may be punishable under S. 209 of the Penal Code, but he does not by so doing commit the offence either of extortion or of attempting to commit extortion.[2]

14. Offences involving a breach of the peace—Cl. (e).—As to what is meant by offences involving a breach of the peace, see Notes to S. 106, ante.

A person cannot be bound over under this clause unless it is found that he has habitually committed or attempted to commit or abetted the commission of such offences. Where it was found that the naib of two co-sharers Zamindars who were brothers had led several riots in their interests and had been convicted in several cases and that certain lathials were always employed to help their cause, it was held that one of the brothers who was the Muktear practising and residing out of the place and who was shown not to have been implicated in the acts ought not to have been bound over, but that the other who resided at the place and whose complicity was established was rightly bound over under this clause.[1] Where a person being aware that violence is the reasonable outcome of the doctrine he preaches, conducts a propaganda against forces of law and order and instigates breaches of peace, he is an abettor of an offence involving a breach of the peace and can be bound over under this clause.[2]

Where an order binding over a person under Cl. (f) was passed and on appeal, the District Magistrate found that Cl. (e) was more appropriate, it was held that inasmuch as Cl. (f) described the offence in Cl. (e) in an aggravated form, the District Magistrate had power to reduce the security and pass an order under this clause.[3]

15. Desperate and dangerous character—Cl. (f).—A man of desperate and dangerous character means a person who shows such a reckless disregard of the safety of the person or the property of his neighbours that his being at large without security would be detrimental to the community.[1] Thus where certain tenants formed themselves into a party to compel the Zamindar to settle with them certain lands which were thrown out by a river into the zamindari tract and agreed to divide the lands amongst all of them and many loots and assaults were committed by them against the Zamindar and the recalcitrant members, it was held that action could be taken against the tenants under this clause.[2] Similarly, where it was proved that a person was associating with a number of persons who were known to be members of a revolutionary party and there were indications that he was in sympathy with them, it was held that he could be bound over under this clause.[2-a] Similarly, where a person who was present in the precincts of the Court was proved to have threatened an assessor and warned him that if he did not give his opinion in favour of the accused he would be killed by pistol or bomb, it was held that he was a desperate and dangerous character.[2-b] But the mere fact that a person happens to be of a litigious disposition[3] or is a habitual gambler or opium smoker[4] or is of a quarrelsome and turbulent nature[5] or is a general nuisance to his neighbours[6] cannot, however, make him a desperate and dangerous character within the meaning of this clause. Thus, where it was found that the persons proceeded against had made themselves objectionable in the neighbourhood and had been annoying the villagers in various ways by kicking at their doors in nights and throwing brickbats on the roofs and annoying respectable women, it was held that they were not liable to be bound over under this clause.[7] Similarly the mere fact that a person was caught while committing adultery[8] or, that he committed an assault for which he was tried and acquitted[9] was held not to be a circumstance which would make him a dangerous and desperate character.

Where evidence is admissible and has been admitted to show that a man is a habitual offender under other clauses of this section and he is also being proceeded against under this clause, it is a mere inference of fact from the nature of the offences as to whether he is not also a dangerous and desperate character.[10]

1. Legislative Changes.—

(1) Under the Codes of 1861 and 1872 there was no provision for an order in writing being made as required by this section, before proceedings were initiated for security to keep the peace or for good behaviour. A summons had, however, to be sent to the party proceeded against in proceedings for security for keeping the peace, specifying the particulars specified in this section.[1]

(2) There is no difference between the Codes of 1882 and this Code in this respect.

2. Scope of the section.—Where a Magistrate gets information of the kind specified in Ss. 107, 108, 109 or 110 and is of opinion that there is sufficient ground for proceeding, the first thing that he should do is to pass an order in writing under this section against the person concerned.[1] The order should thereafter be served on such person under Ss. 114 and 115, infra or, if he is present in Court, it should be read out to him under S. 113, infra, so that he may have an opportunity to show cause why the proceedings should not be taken against him.[2]

The provisions of the section must be strictly complied with.[3] The order should set forth—

(1) The substance of the information received by the Magistrate on which he has decided to act;

306. The several provisions of the last preceding Chapter relating to the issue of summons and warrant of arrest for securing the personal attendance of the party informed against, shall apply to proceedings taken under this Chapter against persons required to give security for their good behaviour.

Issue of summons and warrant of arrest.

(2) The amount of the bond to be executed;

(3) The term for which such bond is to be in force; and

(4) The number, character and class of sureties, if any, required.[4]

It is not necessary to give anything more than the particulars stated above. Thus, the order need not set forth a list of the witnesses in support of the proceeding.[5]

An order under this section cannot impose any conditions not referred to in the section. Thus a condition that the persons proceeded against should undertake that no attempt would be made by them or their agents to realise rents by force and that nothing would be done to induce a breach of the peace, could not be imposed in the order under this section.[6]

The procedure provided by this section and S. 117, must, with necessary modifications and additions, be followed where it is intended to take preventive action under S. 7 of the Burmah Habitual Offenders Restriction Act, 1919.[7]

3. Substance of the information.—A Magistrate acting under this section is bound to set forth in his order in writing the substance of the information on which he purports to act.[1] The object of this requirement is to make the person proceeded against clearly understand what the matter is upon which he has to show cause[2] to afford him reasonable opportunity to come prepared to meet the case against him and to enable him to get his evidence ready.[3]

It is only the substance of the information that need, however, be set forth in the order. There is a difference of opinion as to the extent of the information that is to be given as the "substance of the information received". According to the Chief Court of Oudh[4] it is not necessary to state more than will show the person proceeded against, the particular section or sub-section on which the Court proposes to proceed against him. The order need not show the nature of the case against him. A Magistrate may get information, for example, under S. 110 which is itself very meagre and lacking in details and may decide to act upon it. It may be unwise for him to take such action without carefully checking such information, but he has jurisdiction to take such action and if his information is meagre, the substance of the information would also be necessarily meagre, and it is sufficient for him to state it to make the order legal. If he has taken action on insufficient information, the proceedings may, on the evidence, be found to have been without justification, but this will not affect the legality of the order itself. The High Court of Calcutta has also held that it is sufficient to specify the section or sub-section under which the party is proceeded against.[5] Suhrawardy, J., said "the words 'substance of the information' mean such or so much of the information as would enable the party to know under what clause of S. 110 he is charged or to what particular class of offenders he is said to belong.....I concede that where possible, the repetition of the words of the section should be avoided, but it may not be possible in every case." And Graham, J., said "As I understand the words, it means substance as distinguished from details or particulars and I do not think that it was ever contemplated that the proceeding should set out details in the manner of a charge drawn up at a trial." The High Court of Allahabad while agreeing with the view of the Chief Court of Oudh has added that where the particular clause of the section refers to two or more offences, that particular offence which is appropriate to the particular case should also be mentioned in the order.[6] Their Lordships observed: "We would note, if the principle which we have approved be not accepted, the utter impossibility of drawing the line at any place or of offering the Magistrates any guiding principle which would assist them in determining how much information is to be given". The High Court of Madras has, on the other hand, taken the view that it is not sufficient to specify the section or clause of the section under which the Magistrate proposes to proceed but that the order should give the time and place of facts charged and sufficient details which would enable the accused to know what he has to meet.[7] This view is based on the principle that an order under this section is something in the nature of indictment or charge and that, therefore, it should contain substantial particulars indicating the grounds upon which the information to the Magistrate is based.[8]

It is submitted that the latter view is not correct. Under Ss. 107 to 110 a Magistrate may receive information which may itself be meagre and it is not possible for him always to set forth in his order anything more than what he has himself received and on which he has decided to act. The extent of the information, therefore, which must be set forth must depend, in each case, upon the circumstances of that case. For example in cases coming under S. 107 there may be information in regard to some circumstances which render it probable that a person is likely to commit a breach of the peace.[9] In such cases it is possible to give some details of the information received and a mere assertion that the Magistrate is informed that a breach of the peace is likely to occur may not be sufficient.[10] But in cases coming under S. 110 the information may consist merely of reports which he has heard from sources which he considers reliable. It may be the barest information lacking in details and particulars. An order setting forth, in such a case, that he has received reliable information that the applicant is a habitual thief or receiver of stolen property is a sufficient compliance with the law.[11]

It is however necessary where a person is sought to be proceeded against under S. 110 that the sub-section under which he is charged should be specified. It is not enough merely to assert that he has committed an offence generally under S. 110.[12] Nor is an order proper which does not specify what the section is under which the party is proceeded against. Where a notice was by no means clear whether the accusation which the party had to meet was one under S. 109 or under S. 110 of the Code, it was held that there was no sufficient compliance with the section.[13]

Since the order has to set forth only the substance of the information received by the Magistrate under Ss. 107, 108, 109 or 110, it should not contain matters which are not relevant under those sections. The Magistrate shall be careful to see that his order is in the terms of the section which he proposes to apply.[14] Thus the fact that a man is suspected to have committed a certain crime is not a legitimate ground for taking action under S. 110 and consequently an order under this section that a person is "strongly suspected" of having committed offences cannot be said to be properly drawn up.[15] Similarly an order stating "you have only a nominal means of livelihood except the proceeds of theft or burglary" or "you have a bad reputation in the vicinity of your village" is not a proper order.[16] Again where a Magistrate passed an order to the following effect, namely, "you have been suspected of the following crimes—Crime No. 24, crime No. 23, crime No. 13, and crime No. 8," it was held that it was impossible for the suspect to know what crime No. 24, etc., referred to and that the substance of the information received could not be said to have been set forth in the order as required by this section.[17]

The "substance of the information received" will not include the source of the information which need not therefore be set out in the order.[18] Nor is the person proceeded against entitled to a copy of the information on which the Magistrate decided to act.[19]

With a view to satisfy himself as to the desirability or urgency of issuing a notice under this section the Magistrate has, for obvious reasons the right to test the accuracy of the information received by him before issuing the notice. He may for this purpose, call for a report from the Police,[20] or from a Subordinate Magistrate.[21] He may also, if he thinks fit, take information on oath in the presence of the accused before framing his order.[22]

4. Amount of the bond to be executed.—In fixing the amount of security a Magistrate should consider the status of life of the person concerned, and should not go beyond a sum for which there is a fair probability of his being able to find security. The imprisonment that can be awarded under S. 123 infra, it must be remembered, is provided as a protection to society against the perpetration of crime by the individual, and not as a punishment for a crime committed; and being made conditional on default of furnishing security, it is only reasonable and just that the individual should be afforded a fair chance, at least of complying with the required condition of furnishing security.[1]

Where an order directed the suspect to execute a bond for Rs. 100 and to furnish two sureties for Rs. 300, it was held that there was only one penalty of a bond and that the principal being bound in that amount, the sureties were bound for the same amount.[2]

Where an order required the suspect to furnish a bond for Rs. 1,000 "with respectable sureties" it was held that it was necessary to specify whether each and all the sureties are liable for the amount of Rs. 1,000 or whether they are liable for Rs. 1,000, between them. These particulars should be specified in order to prevent misunderstandings later on.[3]

There is no power to require that the amount of the security should be deposited in cash.[4] The provisions only contemplate the execution of a bond.

5. Character and class of sureties.—The order under this section should specify the character and class of sureties, if any, required.[1] The view that a Magistrate has no power to require that the security should be given by a particular class of persons[1-a] is not correct. No further conditions or restrictions, however, than what may be comprised in the words "Character and Class" can be set forth in the order. Thus the Court cannot, in its order under this section direct that the sureties shall be residents of a particular locality[2] or that they should be able to control the persons for whom they were sureties.[3] The reason is that such a direction does not come within the words "Character or class" of the sureties. There is a difference of opinion on the question whether the Court can, under S. 122 infra, reject a surety as being unfit in the sense that he is not living near the accused and may not be able to influence and insure his behaviour.[4]

An order requiring the sureties to be "respectable house-holders"[5] or to be "land-holders"[6] is valid as setting forth the "Character or class" of the sureties required. Similarly an order that the sureties should not be inferior in standing to the accused and should be of respectable character, is also proper. But the power to specify the character and class of the sureties must be reasonably exercised and the order must be such that if a suspect have a bona fide intention to be of good behaviour it will not be impossible for him to find sureties.[7] Thus an order requiring the sureties should not be of the kunbi class, was held to be unreasonable and improper.[8]

6. Amendment of notice.—An order under this section requiring security for good behaviour is in the nature of a charge in a warrant case,[1] and since a charge can be amended at any stage of the proceedings, it is permissible also to amend an order under this section and serve it afresh on the person proceeded against.[2] The Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court has, however, in the undermentioned case[3] held that an order under this section could not be amended in any matter, after it has once been framed and communicated to the party concerned.

7. Effect of non-compliance with the section.—The provisions of this section are only directory and not mandatory[1] and a failure to comply with the requirements thereof, though a grave and substantial irregularity which renders it necessary for the Courts of appeal and revision to scrutinise the proceedings carefully,[2] does not ipso facto vitiate the proceedings without proof of prejudice. Thus the failure to pass an order at all under this section is an irregularity which will not vitiate the proceedings unless a failure of justice or prejudice to the accused has been occasioned thereby.[3] The High Court of Madras seems, however, to be of opinion that such failure will invalidate the proceedings.[4]

The omission to set forth in the order the particulars specified in the section does not divest the Magistrate of his jurisdiction to deal with the suspect which he assumes when the information is given to him[5] but is only an irregularity which will not vitiate proceedings in the absence of proof of prejudice.[6] Where the party proceeded against is, however, prejudiced by the failure to comply with the section, the proceedings would be set aside.[7] The question whether there is a failure of justice or prejudice is, in each case, one of fact.[8] It has been held, however, in the undermentioned cases[9] that a Magistrate has no jurisdiction to act if he fails to comply with the section and that such non-compliance is not a defect that can be cured under S. 537. It is submitted that this view is an extreme one and is not in accordance with the general trend of judicial opinion.

Where a Magistrate wrote the order under this section on the back of a Police Report (which gave full details of the information) but did not embody such information in the order, and instead of sending a copy of the order with the summons as required by S. 115, he gave the substance of the information in the summons itself, it was held that the irregularity was one which was covered by S. 537.[10]

8. Joint order against two or more persons.—It is undesirable that a joint order should be passed against two or more persons. Each person is entitled to a separate notice and not to have the charges which are going to be made against him confused with the charges that are to be made against somebody else.[1] Where, however, in proceedings under S. 110, two persons were alleged to be members of a gang of habitual thieves and always associated in the commission of thefts, it was held that the Magistrate was right in issuing one order against both of them.[2]

9. Security against person in imprisonment.—Security for keeping the peace or for good behaviour should not be demanded from a person who is already undergoing a sentence of imprisonment for an offence. Proceedings already commenced against such prisoner may, if the circumstances justify it, be resumed after his sentence for the offence has expired.[1]

10. Order if a public document.—An order under this section is a public document within the meaning of S. 74 of the Evidence Act, but it cannot be admitted in evidence without proof that the parties mentioned in it are the parties concerned in the question at issue about which it is produced in evidence.[1]

SYNOPSIS.

Note No.
"IS PRESENT IN COURT" 1
"IT SHALL BE READ OVER TO HIM" 2

1. "Is present in Court".—It is immaterial how the person against whom an order has been passed under S. 112, has come to be present in Court. He may be present for another criminal case[1] or might have been brought under arrest either under a warrant or without warrant.[2] Nor is it material whether the arrest under which he has been brought before the Court is legal or not.[3] A summons was sent to a person under S. 114 infra but no order under S. 112 had been drawn up at that time and was consequently not served on him along with the summons as required by him. Where, however, the person appeared in pursuance of the summons, proceedings under S. 112 were drawn up in his presence and the order read out to him, it was held that the fact that the person appeared in pursuance of a summons which was not served as required by S. 115 did not affect the validity of the order under S. 112 and its reading over to the person under this section.[4] Certain persons appeared before a Magistrate in pursuance of an order to show cause why they should not be required to furnish security in the sum of Rs. 2,000. On that day the Magistrate passed entirely fresh order under S. 112 in which the amount of security demanded was Rs. 5,000. This later order was read out to them as required by this section. It was held that the proceedings were not vitiated by the procedure adopted by the Magistrate.[5]

2. "It shall be read over to him".—If the person against whom an order under S. 112 is made is not present in Court, the Court should issue a summons to him to appear or if he is in custody, a warrant directing the officer in whose custody he is, to bring him before the Court (S. 114). Such summons or warrant should be accompanied by a copy of the order under S. 112 which should be delivered to him (S. 115). If on the other hand, the person is present in Court, the order should be read over to him[1] and if he so desires the substance thereof should be explained to him. An omission to do so is likely to cause great prejudice to him.[2]

Difference between the Codes of 1872 and 1882—

Under the proviso to S. 494 of the Code of 1872, the Magistrate could issue a warrant if he had reason to believe that by so doing a breach of the peace might probably be prevented. Under the proviso to S. 114 of the Code of 1882 as well as under this Code, a warrant could be issued only if the breach of the peace could not be prevented otherwise than by the immediate arrest of such person.

2. "Shall issue summons".—Where a person against whom an order under S. 112 is passed is not present in Court, the Magistrate is bound to issue a summons requiring him to appear, or if he is in custody a warrant for his production. No order for security can validly be made against him under S. 118, infra in the absence of such summons or warrant.[1] Nor can a summons or a warrant issue against such person unless an order had first been made against him under S. 112.[2]

3. Form of summons.—Form 12 of Sch. V of the Code requires that the substance of the information should be set forth in the summons. Where neither the form set forth the substance of the information nor a copy of the order under S. 112, served along with the summons it was held that it was impossible to say that the persons against whom the proceedings were taken were not prejudiced by the non-compliance with the provisions of the section.[1] Where a Magistrate made an order against a person under S. 112 with a view to taking action against him under S. 110, and issued a summons to him, but on his appearance in pursuance of such summons, the Magistrate thought that S. 110 was inapplicable and proceeded to deal with the case as one under S. 107, it was held that the facts necessary to be proved in order to make a person liable under S. 110 were different from those necessary to be proved in order to make him liable under S. 107, and that the party proceeded against should have been served with a fresh notice with reference to the altered view of the circumstances on which the Magistrate proposed to proceed.[2]

4. Sufficient time to appear in Court to show cause.—When issuing a summons to any person under this section, sufficient time should be allowed so as to enable him to get ready with his evidence, for the purpose of the inquiry under S. 117 of the Code.[1] Thus where parties, required to show cause on the 9th of July, were served with a summons on the 5th and 7th of July, it was held that the time allowed was not sufficient and the order requiring them to furnish security was accordingly set aside.[2]

5. "Or where such person is in custody".—Where the person against whom an order is made under S. 112 is in custody, the Court should issue a warrant directing the officer in whose custody he is, to bring him before the Court. Thus a man may under S. 55 of the Code be arrested without warrant by a Police-officer with a view to take proceedings under S. 110 and kept in custody. In such a case if an order is made against such person under S. 112, a warrant as contemplated by this section should issue.[1] It is not necessary that the custody should have been under an arrest, made within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate acting under this section. This section will apply even if the arrest has been made outside jurisdiction and the person arrested is in custody within jurisdiction.[2]

6. Immediate arrest.—A Magistrate may, under the proviso, order the immediate arrest of the person against whom an order under S. 112 is made, whether a summons or warrant for his production has issued or not. Before, however, such an exceptional measure is taken, two conditions are necessary to be satisfied:

(1) The Magistrate must have reason to fear the commission of a breach of the peace and

(2) It must appear to him that such breach of the peace cannot be prevented otherwise than by the immediate arrest of such person.[1]

These conditions are obviously directed against any ill considered precipitancy on the part of the Magistrate.[2]

Persons imprisoned during pendency of security proceedings against them cannot be kept in solitary confinement.[3]

7. Record of information.—The Magistrate is bound to record the substance of the report or information.[1] It is not enough for him to merely express a belief that such a course is necessary.[2] The provision is intended as a safeguard with a view to the protection of persons whose liberty is affected by such order and who may have resort to a superior Court under S. 498 or any other provision of the Code.[3]

8. "May at any time".—The proviso must be taken to relate to the circumstances contemplated by the main portion of the section that is, to a stage before the person proceeded against has appeared in Court in pursuance of a summons or warrant. Where such person has appeared and has executed a bond under S. 117, sub-S. (3), the Magistrate has no power to issue a warrant of arrest against him on the ground that there is an imminent danger of the breach of the peace.[1]

9. Notice before arrest.—No notice is necessary to be given to the person proceeded against before an arrest can be effected under the proviso.[1] When he is brought before the Court under such arrest, the order against him under S. 112 should, however, be read and explained to him as required by S. 113.

10. Warrant of arrest against person outside jurisdiction.—Under S. 110 of the Code, a Magistrate cannot take proceedings against a person unless such person is within the local limits of his jurisdiction. It has been held in the undermentioned case[1] that a Magistrate cannot issue a warrant against a person under this section unless such person is within the local limits of his jurisdiction.

11. Bail.—Section 496 infra provides that bail may be claimed by "any person other than a person accused of a non-bailable offence" who "is arrested or detained without warrant by an officer in charge of a police station or is brought before a Court". The section should, however, be read along with other provisions of the Code giving a special right of detention to a Court.[1] Thus under S. 107, sub-S. (3), a Court can detain a person brought before it, under the circumstances specified therein, until the enquiry is completed. In such a case it cannot be said that the arrested person has an absolute right to be released on bail.[2] In the absence of any such special provision however, the Court has no power to refuse to release a person arrested under this section on should contain all the particulars necessary for an order under S. 112, supra.[1] Section 115 of the Code of 1882 is the same as S. 115 of the present Code. S. 115, Notes 1—6.

2. "Shall be accompanied by a copy of the order".—It is necessary that a copy of the order passed under S. 112 should accompany and be delivered to the person against whom a process is issued under S. 114. The intention of the Code is that any man who is called on to meet the exceptional procedure laid down in Chap. VIII of the Code should, at his own house, have the fullest information compatible with the circumstances of the case as to the reasons why his liberty is in danger of being interfered with[1] and in order to enable him, if he is in a position to do so, to bring evidence to rebut the truth of the information against him.[2]

3. Summons must fix reasonable time to show cause.—The delivery of the order and the summons must be sufficiently early so as to give the person summoned sufficient time to show cause against the order and to get his witnesses. So, in a case under the Code of 1872, where the summons containing the particulars of the information was served only two days prior to the date when the person was called on to show cause, it was held that there was no sufficient service.[1]

4. Mode of serving summons and executing warrants.—See Ss. 69 to 71 and Ss. 77 to 86, supra.

5. Power of the Court to demand security different from the one specified in the order.—Where the Court issued summons specifying the nature and the amount of the security required, it cannot, after the person has appeared in response to the summons, ask for a security different in nature and amount than the one specified in the summons.[1]

But there is nothing illegal in the Court drawing up fresh proceedings in his presence for security for a different sum or for a different period, and reading out the same to him under S. 113, ante. See Notes to that section.

6. Effect of non-compliance with the requirements of the section.—Where the summons referred to in the section has not at all been served,[1] or where it has been served so late as to deprive the person concerned of a reason-

The object of serving a copy of the preliminary order on a person under this section or of reading that order over to him under S. 113, ante is only to acquaint him with the details of the order itself and to enable him to defend himself against the allegations upon which the preliminary order was granted.[4] Where, therefore, the party is made to know what the information against him is, and is given sufficient opportunity to meet it, no prejudice can be caused to him by the mere failure to serve the copy of the order.[5]

Appearance by pleader. See Note 3, Pt. 1. peace. See Note 2, Pt. 1.
Section applies only to bonds to keep

1. Legislative Changes:—

(1) Under the Codes of 1861 and 1872, the agent of the person called upon to show cause could not only be permitted to appear but also to enter into the required security.[1] Under S. 116 of the Code of 1882 and the present section the pleader of the person called upon to show cause can be allowed only to appear for him.

(2) The words "by an agent duly authorised to act on his behalf" which occurred in the prior Codes were substituted by the words" by a pleader" in S. 116 of the Code of 1882.

2. Scope of the Section.—This section empowers the Magistrate to dispense with the personal attendance of any person called upon to show cause why he should not be ordered to execute a bond to keep the peace. S. 205, infra is a similar provision enabling a Magistrate to dispense with the personal attendance of an accused person.

The section does not apply to a case where a person is called upon to show cause why he should not be ordered to furnish security for good behaviour. The personal attendance of such a person cannot be dispensed with either under this section or under S. 205.[1]

3. The Magistrate 'may'.—The word 'may' shows that the Magistrate has a discretion to dispense with or not to dispense with the personal attendance of the person called upon to give security. The discretion is, however a judicial

495. The Magistrate may, if he sees sufficient cause, dispense with the personal attendance of the person informed against under section four hundred and ninety-one, and may permit him to appear and enter into the required security, or show cause against such requisition, by any agent duly authorized to act in his behalf.

Magistrate may dispense with personal attendance of person informed against.

286. The Magistrate or other Officer as aforesaid may, if he see sufficient cause, dispense with the personal attendance of the person informed against and permit him to appear and enter into the required security, or show cause against such requisition, by an agent duly authorised to act in his behalf.

Magistrate may dispense with personal attendance of party informed against.

(2) Such inquiry shall be made, as nearly as may be practicable where the order requires security for keeping the peace, in the manner hereinafter prescribed for conducting trials and recording evidence in summons-cases; and where the order requires security for good behaviour in the manner hereinafter prescribed for conducting trials and recording evidence in warrant-cases, except that no charge need be framed.

(3) Pending the completion of the inquiry under sub-section (1) the Magistrate, if he considers that immediate measures are necessary for the prevention of a breach of the peace or disturbance of the public tranquillity or the commission of any offence or for the public safety, may, for reasons to be recorded in writing, direct the person in respect of whom the order under section 112 has been made to execute a bond, with or without sureties, for keeping the peace or maintaining good behaviour until the conclusion of the inquiry, and may detain him in custody until such bond is executed or, in default of execution, until the inquiry is concluded:

1. Legislative Changes:—

The following changes were introduced by the Amending Act 18 of 1923.

(1) Sub-S. 3 has been newly added.

(2) The words "or is so desperate and dangerous as to render his being at large without security hazardous to the community" in sub-S. (4) have been newly added. Prior to such amendment it was held that evidence of general repute was not admissible to prove a charge under S. 110, Cl. (f).[1] In view of the aforementioned change these decisions are now obsolete and no longer law.

2. "Shall proceed to investigate".—The object of this chapter is not to punish persons for an evil reputation but to prevent and guard society from them by placing them under such substantial but not excessive security as will prevent them from resorting to evil courses.[1] The section cannot be interpreted as giving a weapon to the Magistrate in his executive capacity for the suppression of crime. He is bound to hold a judicial enquiry and investigate the truth of the information upon which proceedings have been instituted under this chapter[2] and give a legal finding before passing the final order for security.[3] provision of S. 537 of the Code.[18] In the case cited below[19] it was held that where, in proceedings under S. 107, the preliminary order did not contain sufficient particulars of the information upon which the Magistrate acted and objection was taken on that ground, that the Magistrate had power to order an amendment of the same by giving full particulars.

The words "such further evidence as may appear necessary" refer to evidence ejusdem generis with the evidence described in the words immediately preceding. Hence the "further evidence" which a Magistrate can take under this section must relate to the information on which action has been taken. Evidence as to occurrences after the receipt of information by the Magistrate under S. 110 is therefore inadmissible under this section.[20]

Inquiries under this chapter are governed by ordinary rules of evidence and evidence not admissible under the Evidence Act, cannot be admitted in proceedings under this section.[21]

Inquiries under this section ought not to be long drawn out. Magistrates should be careful to see that unnecessary witnesses are not examined.[22]

3. Effect of consent to give security—Whether enquiry necessary.—Where, in response to the notice issued under S. 112, the person sought to be bound over appears before the Magistrate and expresses his willingness to furnish the security as required by the notice, is the Magistrate still bound to hold an enquiry as to the truth or otherwise of the information upon which he has taken action? Upon this point there is a conflict of judicial opinion. The High Courts of Calcutta,[1] Lahore,[2] Madras,[3] the Chief Court of Lower Burma,[4] and Upper Burma[5] and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur[6] have held that the mere consent or readiness to furnish security does not amount to a plea of guilty to the charges contained in the preliminary order and the Court is not justified in binding him over on the strength of such consent alone without any inquiry and evidence. The High Court of Allahabad[7] dissenting from the view taken in its earlier decisions[8] has, on the other hand, held that where the notice under S. 112 is read over to the person proceeded against and after understanding it he consents to give security his action really amounts to a plea of guilty and no enquiry is necessary. In its latest decision,[9] however, the High Court of Allahabad has held that it depends upon the facts and circumstances of each case as to whether the consent to give security amounts to a plea of guilty. In the above case where the person sought to be bound over after denying the several charges contained in the preliminary order nevertheless consented to give security it was held that the consent could not be construed to be a plea of guilty.

In the undermentioned case[10] the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind has held that even where the person sought to be bound over admits the several allegations contained in the notice under S. 112 the Court is not justified in dispensing with an inquiry.

The Judicial Commissioner's Court of Peshawar has held that it is open to the Magistrate to bind over a person on his own admission of the allegations made against him but that such admission must be clear and unambiguous.[11]

3-A. Reference to arbitration.—Proceedings for taking security for keeping the peace or for good behaviour cannot be referred to arbitration.[1]

4. Mode of enquiry.—Sub-S. 2 prescribes the manner in which enquiries under the section are to be made. In proceedings for security for keeping the peace, the procedure prescribed by the Code for the trial of summons cases ought to be followed. Where the Court tries such a case as a warrant case and orders rigorous imprisonment in default of furnishing security it has been held that the order is illegal.[1] The evidence in such proceedings should be recorded as required by S. 355 of the Code.[2] Where the complainant and his witnesses are absent on the date fixed for hearing, the proper course for the Magistrate is to pass an order of discharge under S. 119 holding that it is not proved that the person in respect of whom the inquiry is made should execute a bond. S. 247 of the Code does not apply to such a case as there is no summons issued and there is no accused person before the Court.[3]

In proceedings for security for good behaviour the procedure prescribed for the trial of warrant cases should be followed.[4] The evidence in such a case should be recorded in the manner prescribed by S. 360 of the Code. Otherwise, it has been held, that the trial is vitiated.[5] According to the procedure prescribed for the trial of a warrant case an accused person cannot be called upon to enter upon his defence until the prosecution closes its case, and no further evidence can be admitted unless the Court chooses to act under S. 540 for which valid reasons must be recorded. Where, in proceedings under S. 110 the Court recalls and examines prosecution witnesses after the defence is closed without recording any reasons it has been held that the procedure is erroneous and prejudicial to the person proceeded against.[6]

There is a conflict of judicial opinion as to whether S. 256 of the Code which gives the right to an accused person after the framing of charge to recall the prosecution witnesses for further cross-examination applies to proceedings for security for good behaviour. According to the High Courts of Calcutta,[7] Lahore,[8] Madras[9] and Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind[10] S. 256 does not apply to such proceedings. The reason for such a view is that the object of the legislature in enacting S. 256 and giving the accused a right to recall and further cross-examine the prosecution witnesses is that it is only after the charge is framed that accused comes to know of the definite case he has to meet, and that inasmuch as in security proceedings the preliminary order under S. 112 itself constitutes the charge and no fresh charge is framed in the inquiry, the maxim "cessante rationes legis cessat ipsa lex (the reason for the law ceasing, the law itself ceases to apply) applies to the case and therefore S. 256 does not apply. The High Court of Allahabad,[11] and, the Chief Court of Rangoon[12] have, however, taken a contrary view and held that the provisions of S. 256 do apply to such proceedings.

Whatever doubt and conflict there may be as regards the applicability of S. 256, there is no doubt, that S. 257 applies to proceedings for good behaviour. The Magistrate can under the latter section recall the prosecution witnesses for a further examination at the instance of the defence provided the requirements of that section are fulfilled.[13] Under S. 257 the Court is also bound to issue processes for summoning the defence witnesses cited unless it considers that the application for such summons have been made vexatiously to defeat and delay the ends of justice.[14]

It has been held that S. 342 of the Code does not apply to proceedings for security for good behaviour for the reason that the person proceeded against in security cases is not accused of any offence. Hence it has been held that an omission to question him at the close of the prosecution case does not vitiate the trial and the irregularity even if any, is also cured by S. 537.[15]

5. Applicability of other provisions of the Code to inquiries under this section.—

(i) Applicability of S. 250.—A person against whom proceedings are taken under this chapter is not accused of any offence. Hence it has been held that the provisions of S. 250 will not apply to enquiries under this section and Court cannot pass an order for compensation.[1]

(ii) Applicability of S. 202.—It has been held by the High Court of Madras[2] that in proceedings under this section the Court has power to direct an inquiry or investigation by a subordinate Magistrate or the Police under the provisions of S. 202. But such an inquiry cannot be directed in a pending proceeding. It ought to be done before the commencement of the inquiry.[3]

(iii) Applicability of S. 350.—The provisions of S. 350 of the Code apply to proceedings under this section and a de novo inquiry can be ordered in the case of a change of Magistracy.[4]

(iii-a) Applicability of S. 443.—Section 443 contemplates cases of an offence being inquired into or tried and does not apply to inquiries under this section.[4-a]

(iv) Applicability of S. 517.—It has been held that a proceeding under this section is an "inquiry" within the meaning of S. 517 and the Court is empowered to pass an order with regard to the property produced before the Court though there is no proof of an offence committed with reference to the property.[5]

S. 117, Notes 5—6.

(v) Applicability of S. 545.—Section 545 does not apply to proceedings under this section as no fine can be imposed in security cases. An order therefore directing a person ordered to furnish security to pay costs to the complainant has been held to be ultra vires.[6]

(vi) Transfer under S. 192.—See Notes to S. 192, infra.

(vii) Transfer under S. 526.—As to whether proceedings under this section can be transferred under S. 526, see Notes to S. 526 and the following cases.[7]

(viii) Applicability of S. 190 (1) (c).—Although S. 190 (1) (c), in terms applies only to offences, it has been held that the principle of that section applies to proceedings under this section. Where a Magistrate has been influenced by his preliminary local investigation in coming to a finding as to the guilt of an accused person in proceedings under S. 110, it has been held that the Magistrate should not have tried the case himself.[8]

(ix) Bail and detention in custody.—Persons against whom security proceedings are taken are entitled to bail as of right except in cases where the Court takes action under sub-S. (3) of this section or under sub-S. (4) of S. 107.[9] Section 167 of the Code does not apply to proceedings under this section and a Second Class Magistrate has no power to remand to custody a person against whom proceedings are instituted under S. 110.[10] In the case cited below[11] it was held that to send a person to jail while an inquiry under security proceedings is pending against him is illegal and prejudicial to his interests.

6. Interim Security—Sub-S. (3).—Sub-S. (3) has been newly introduced in the present Code. The object of the provision is to empower the Magistrate to direct a person against whom an order under S. 112 has been made to execute a bond for keeping the peace or maintaining good behaviour until the conclusion of the inquiry. The power so to direct is made to depend upon the Magistrate considering that immediate measures are necessary for any of the following purposes:— S. 117, Notes 6—7.

(1) for the prevention of
  (a) a breach of the peace,
  (b) a disturbance of public tranquillity,
  (c) the commission of any offence.
(2) for the public safety.[1]

It is incumbent upon the Court to state in writing that the requirements of the section have been fulfilled. A mere statement that it is passed 'on account of emergency' is not sufficient.[2] Where the Court passes an interim order for security the terms of the security should not be more onerous than those specified in the order under S. 112.[3]

The provisions of Chap. XXXIX of the Code relating to bail do not apply to an order passed under this sub-section. The High Court cannot under S. 498 reduce the amount of security ordered to be furnished by the Magistrate under this sub-section, though it can reduce the same under its inherent powers where it is too high.[4] The reduction by the High Court of the amount of the interim security does not fetter the discretion of the Magistrate as to the amount of the final security that he may order.[4-a] The Court has jurisdiction to pass an order for interim security notwithstanding that an application is made under S. 526, Cl. 8.[5]

7. Evidence of General repute—Sub-S. (4).—Where a person is charged under S. 110 as being a habitual offender, or as being a desperate and dangerous person, his character becomes a fact in issue. Under S. 5 read with Explanation 1 to S. 54 of the Evidence Act, evidence as to such character becomes relevant. But under the provisions of the said Act, evidence, in such cases, can be given only of general reputation or general disposition and not of particular acts by which such reputation or disposition is shown, the only exception to the rule being that a previous conviction, though a particular act, may be proved as evidence of bad character. (Section 55 of the Evidence Act). This section provides another exception to that rule by enacting that the fact that a person is a habitual offender or is a desperate and dangerous character may be proved, for the purpose of an enquiry under this section, by evidence of general repute or otherwise, i.e., by particular acts by which such character is established.[1] The view held in some cases[2] that this sub-section is an exception to the general rule that character evidence is inadmissible is not correct, for, as stated above, evidence as to character is always admissible under the Evidence Act where such character is a fact in issue.

Reputation means what is thought of a person by others, and the general reputation of a person is the collective opinion of his fellow townsmen in whose midst he lives,[3] though it need not necessarily be the opinion of the entire community.[4] Evidence which discloses the existence of such collective opinion is evidence in proof of general reputation.[5]

General reputation must be distinguished from rumour which is inadmissible in evidence.[5-a] The distinction may be illustrated as follows. A and B are on bad terms. Theft takes place in the house of B. It is suspected that A is at the bottom of the theft. A few believe in this and a few do not. This is a rumour. Again a theft takes place in the house of C with whom A is inimical. A is again suspected and there is again a rumour. Suppose instances like this become numerous. In course of time people begin to believe and talk about him as a thief and regard him as a thief. This is a stage where A begins to have a reputation among his neighbours of being a thief. The roots of a bad reputation are thus often planted in rumour, but it cannot be laid down by any hard and fast rule how many instances build up a reputation and how long it takes for rumour to ripen into reputation.[6] In Rai Ishri Pershad v. Empress.[7] Their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court observed as follows:—

"It is hardly necessary to say that evidence of rumour is mere hearsay evidence, and hearsay evidence of a particular fact. Evidence of repute is a totally different thing. A man's general reputation is the reputation which he bears in the place in which he lives amongst all the townsmen, and if it is proved that a man who lives in a particular place is looked upon by his fellow townsmen whether they happen to know him or not, as a man of good repute, that is strong evidence that he is a man of that character. On the other hand if the state of things is that the body of his fellow townsmen who know him, look upon him as a dangerous man and a man of bad habits, that is strong evidence that he is a man of bad character; but to say that because there are rumours in a particular place among a certain class of people that a man has done particular acts or has characteristics of a certain kind, those rumours are in themselves evidence under this section, is to say what the law does not justify us in saying''.

As has been seen already, it is evidence of the general reputation or collective opinion of the neighbourhood that is made admissible both by the Evidence Act and by this section. The individual opinion of specified individuals as to the character of another person, does not constitute general reputation, and evidence thereof is merely opinion evidence which, under the provisions of the Evidence Act, is inadmissible except in the particular cases specified in that Act.[8] A mere suspicion on the part of the witness as to the complicity of the person sought to be proceeded against in certain isolated offences, is only his individual opinion and is not per se admissible as evidence of general repute.[9] The mere fact that the witness is a police-officer will not made his evidence any the weightier or admissible.[10] Similarly police records of suspected cases[11] or history sheets maintained by the police[12] or entries in Thana Village crime note book[13] or police diaries[14] would all be inadmissible as evidence of general repute.

But although suspicion is not substantive evidence of general repute, the facts which would not be admissible at an ordinary trial, is not admissible under over a considerable period may be admissible as corroborative evidence of bad repute under S. 11, sub-S. (2) of the Evidence Act.[15] Conversely, in a doubtful case, the fact that a person has never been suspected of any offence may weaken the evidence of bad repute given against him.[16]

Enquiries under this section are governed by the ordinary rules of evidence, and therefore, evidence, whether of general repute or of particular facts which would not be admissible at an ordinary trial, is not admissible under this section.[17] Where, therefore, evidence of general repute is to be let in under sub-S. (4) it must be direct evidence in accordance with the rules of evidence (S. 60 of the Evidence Act.)[17-a] Thus if a witness deposes "I heard the general reputation of X in the village to be so and so" it is direct evidence of the reputation by a person who heard the reputation.[18] But if he deposes "I heard B say that he heard the general reputation of X to be so and so" it is merely hearsay evidence, for, the person who heard the reputation directly was B and A merely repeats what B told him. In the undermentioned cases[19] the view was expressed that evidence of reputation must necessarily comprise hearsay evidence but was admissible by virtue of the provisions of this sub-section. It is submitted that this view is not correct. The existence of a general reputation is as much a question of fact as any other and the evidence of a witness who heard the reputation cannot in any view be considered hearsay evidence. It has also been held by the High Court of Patna that if the deponent does not know the person whose reputation is in question, his evidence that he heard the reputation is hearsay and therefore inadmissible.[20] It is submitted that this view also is incorrect. It is difficult to understand how a knowledge of the person whose character is in question is a necessary condition for the admissibility of the evidence. It may, however, be said that the evidence of a witness who does not know the person about whose reputation he deposes, would necessarily be very weak and would not ordinarily justify an order for security.[21]

But that is a very different thing from saying that such evidence is not admissible at all. S 117, Note 7.

As a matter of practice evidence of general repute ought to be evidence given by respectable persons who are acquainted with the person sought to be bound over, who live in the same neighbourhood, and are aware of his reputation.[22] It would not ordinarily be sufficient to examine merely officials such as the Police or zaildars or sufedposhes.[23] The Court ought not to accept the evidence of such witnesses unless they had special means and occasion to know the reputation in the course of their official duties.[24] At the same time it would not be safe to reject the evidence of any witness merely because he is a village mukhia, or a police-officer.[24-a] Nor is the vague evidence of witnesses that a man is a habitual thief or that the neighbourhood is of that opinion, of much value without particulars as to his associates, means of subsistence and as to whether increase of thefts synchronises with his presence in the locality.[24-b] But the witnesses need not necessarily be immediate neighbours, for it is quite possible for a cunning rogue to conceal his real character from his immediate neighbours. The Court must satisfy itself in each case that the evidence is true and properly appraise the evidence of persons living at a considerable distance.[25] Thus, where, in consequence of a series of dacoities in certain villages, proceedings are instituted against a person for being a robber by habit, the evidence of general reputation given against him by persons from the different villages in which the dacoities took place would be proper and admissible.[26]

The Court should exercise a proper discretion in each case and satisfy itself that the evidence of general repute is so general and overwhelming as to leave no doubt that the accused is a habitual thief, robber, etc., as the case may be.[27] The burden of proof, lies, as in any other case, on the prosecution.[28] The Court should however pay particular attention to the evidence of the defence witnesses who speak to good character; such evidence should not be discarded or lightly brushed aside unless there are substantial reasons for discrediting their evidence.[29] The mere fact that the defence witnesses are the caste people of the accused[30] or, that the latter is a very influential man in the locality and therefore is in a position to produce a large number of witnesses on his side,[31] is however no ground for discrediting their evidence. Where the evidence of the prosecution and the defence is equally balanced, and equal, if not greater, number of defence witnesses speak to good character no order demanding security should be passed[32] and this is especially so in a case where the prosecution evidence is meagre and unsatisfactory.[33] The Court must sift and weigh the evidence carefully. It should not, however, be guided by any numerical tests in weighing evidence without paying due regard to the credibility of each witness.[34]

8. Evidence of repute against person charged under S. 107 if admissible.—It is only in the case of a person charged under S. 110 as an habitual offender or as a desperate and dangerous character that evidence can be let in of his general reputation. this sub-section, be let in against him.[1]

S. 117, Notes 8—10.

9. "Or otherwise".—The words "or otherwise" do not permit the transgression of the general rules of evidence as enacted by the Evidence Act.[1] As has been seen already the words are intended to include evidence of particular acts and not merely of general repute, which latter alone would be admissible evidence of character under the Evidence Act. Thus the fact that the person proceeded against has committed a number of thefts, or that he associates with proved bad characters can be proved.[2] But a mere suspicion cannot take the place of legal testimony, unless supported by adequate grounds in which case it is the fact on which the suspicion is based and not the suspicion to which weight can be given.[3] It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad where a witness deposes to the fact that a person is a habitual offender, the fact that such person was suspected in various cases may be admissible as being one of the grounds of the opinion of the witness that the person is a habitual offender.[4] Thus it was observed that the evidence of a witness is admissible if he says "I believe A to be a habitual thief. The grounds of my opinion are:—

(1) He has no honest means of livelihood.

(2) He associates with persons convicted of theft or burglary.

(3) He is frequently absent from his house at night for reasons which he refuses to disclose.

(4) X, Y and Z have severally and on different occasions told me that they suspected him of having stolen their property."

Statement given to the Police are admissible in evidence in proceedings under S. 110 and cannot be shut out by the use of S. 162 inasmuch as an inquiry under this chapter is not an inquiry into an offence.[5] It has been held in the undermentioned case[6] that the words "or otherwise" is intended to give the Magistrate a very large discretion as to the nature of the evidence which he may admit. It is submitted that this view is not correct inasmuch as it will enable him to admit even hearsay or opinion or other inadmissible evidence for the purposes of the enquiry.

10. Admissibility of evidence of previous convictions in S. 110 proceedings.—Any evidence which would be relevant to the charge under inquiry would be admissible even under the Evidence Act.[1] The existence of a number of previous convictions for offences such as theft is a matter which may and should be taken into consideration as indicating the character and disposition of the accused (S. 54, Explanation 2 of the Evidence Act). But the existence of such convictions is not by itself sufficient to justify an order for security. Weight and due regard must be given to the period that has elapsed subsequent to the last conviction in order to see whether during that period he has shown a disposition to conduct himself properly or whether there are indications that he has continued the previous course though he may not have actually brought himself within the clutches of Law.[2] The fact that the accused has been bound over previously under S. 110 may also be stated and proved as one of the grounds on which witnesses to general repute believe him to be a habitual offender.[3] But the Court cannot order security to be furnished on the strength of the previous order alone unless there is evidence of bad character subsequent to the same. In such cases the evidence should relate to the reputation of the person proceeded against subsequent to his release from the previous order.[4]

11. Admissibility of evidence of the commission of a substantive offence in S. 110 proceedings.—The object of the security proceedings as already seen in S. 110 is preventive and not to punish a person for any offence committed by him. Hence positive evidence as to the actual commission of offences is not necessary in proceedings under S. 110.[1] But where evidence is taken as to reputation the Court cannot and should not exclude the reasons which induced the members of the community to form a bad opinion of the accused and if their opinion is based wholly or partly on the belief that he has committed a crime which has not been brought home to him, the Court cannot rule out as inadmissible all evidence on which the belief of the witness is based. Hence instances of specific crimes are admissible in evidence although they are not supported by evidence of such amount and value as would secure a conviction for a substantive offence.[2] Even where a prosecution for a substantive offence had ended in an acquittal, it has been held that evidence relating to the incident which formed the subject-matter of the previous trial cannot be excluded; the fact of acquittal although it may diminish and destroy value of the evidence, has not the effect of rendering such evidence inadmissible.[3]

12. Sufficient evidence in S. 109 proceedings.—Where the only evidence against the accused is the statement of a Police constable that he is wandering without means of subsistence or 'does not work', an order for security will not be justified.[1] So also where the only evidence against the accused was, that he was seen coming out of a sugarcane field at 10 P.M., and tried to run away when challenged.[2] Nor can an order under this section be passed on suspicion, but there must be good basis of fact. Thus where three respectable residents of Delhi were met at night by the Police between railway station and the City of Meerut and gave a satisfactory account of themselves, the mere fact that somewhere close to them a burglar's jemmy was found, will not justify an order for security.[3]

13. Joint enquiry—Sub-S. (5).—Sub-S. (5) permits a joint enquiry against two or more persons provided that they have associated together in the matter under enquiry.[1] The phrase 'associated together' means that the persons have been acting in concert or that there is something in the nature of a conspiracy among them in respect of the various acts alleged against them.[2] Thus where certain persons are alleged to belong to a gang of swindlers who act in concert and cheat ignorant people[3] or, are alleged to belong to a gang of habitual thieves and robbers who are associating together jointly in the commission of thefts, burglaries and robberies[4] a joint inquiry against them all is perfectly justified. Similarly where the charge is that several persons formed one gang with one purpose, viz., that of harassing and intimidating the complainant and each act spoken to by witnesses is an act prompted by that common object and directed towards accomplishing it, a joint inquiry has been held to be valid.[5] But the mere fact that the several persons sought to be proceeded against belong to the same tribe and village[6] or, are close neighbours and have been convicted together on previous occasions[7] or, that they happen to be members of an undivided Hindu family[8] or, in the position of a master and servant[9] is not proof of association in the absence of any evidence to show that they constitute a gang acting in concert in respect of the charges made against them. On the other hand where there is the evidence of association the mere fact that the several persons jointly tried belong to different villages is not a circumstance which would affect the legality of the joint trial.[10] So also where there is evidence that there is a gang of persons associated together to commit such acts as the security sections exist to prevent, it is enough that some members of the gang are shown to have committed the various acts alleged against them; it is not necessary to prove that on every occasion the whole gang acted together.[11]

The concert or association may be due to mutual agreement between several persons or due to the obedience to the orders of a common master. Thus where the several servants of a Zamindar acted together in the matter of extortion of Kabuliats at enhanced rates from the tenants of the master for his benefit and under his directions it was held that the joint enquiry against all the servants was valid.[12]

In order to justify a joint inquiry there should not merely be association but it is essential that such association should be in the matter under inquiry. Thus, a Magistrate cannot deal in one and the same inquiry a person called upon to give security under S. 109 with another person called upon to give security under S. 110.[13] Two opposing or contending parties cannot also be tried in a joint inquiry because they are in conflict with one another; there can be nothing in common between them in respect of the matter under inquiry.[14]

Where the charge is such that it is purely personal to one individual alone and does not afford any scope for several persons acting in concert there can be no association and therefore no joint inquiry in such a case. In Hari Telang v. Emperor[15] it was observed by the High Court of Calcutta that where proceedings are taken against a person as a dangerous character under S. 110. Cl. (f), it could not be said that there was a habitual connection between several persons in regard to the character so as to make them desperate and dangerous persons and that in such a case there should be a separate trial against each person. This view was cited with approval in an earlier Madras decision[16] but was dissented from in a later decision[17] by the same Court. Even in Calcutta it was held in a later decision[18] that a joint inquiry in respect of a charge under S. 110, Cl. (f) was valid; this later decision did not, however, advert to Hari Telang's case. The High Court of Allahabad[19] has also held that where members of a certain secret society associated together for spreading terrorist activities all of them can be jointly tried under S. 110, Cl. (f). In the undermentioned case[20] it was held that the question as to whether a man is a habitual thief or not is a matter personal to oneself and cannot form the subject of a joint enquiry.

As already seen, association is necessary to justify a joint inquiry. The question has arisen as to whether a mere allegation on the part of the prosecution that there is association is enough to justify a joint inquiry although it may subsequently transpire at the trial that there is no association. According to the High Court of Calcutta[21] an allegation on the part of the prosecution that there is association is enough to justify a joint inquiry although there is no proof of the same in the inquiry. According to the High Court of Patna[22] on the other hand, there must be allegation as well as proof of association to justify a joint inquiry. It has been held that the preliminary order under S. 112 should itself contain a charge of association where a joint inquiry is contemplated.[23]

Though the section permits a joint inquiry against several persons where there is association, the Court is not absolved from its duty of giving a separate and distinct finding against each one of them on the merits of the evidence against him.[24]

14. Effect of joint trial where there is no association.—On the question as to whether a joint inquiry held in the absence of any association is a mere irregularity curable under S. 537 of the Code or amounts to an illegality which vitiates the entire proceedings, there is a difference of opinion one set of cases[1] holding that it is only an irregularity which in the absence of any prejudice does not vitiate the trial while a contrary view, viz., that the joint trial is illegal has been taken in the following cases.[2] The latter decisions purport to follow the decision of the Judicial Committee in Subramania Iyer v. King Emperor (I.L.R. 25 Mad. 61, P.C.) where their Lordships observed in dealing with S. 233 of the Code relating to joinder of charges that a violation of the mandatory provisions of the Code amounts to an illegality. It is submitted the former view is correct. Under S. 537 of the Code no finding, sentence or order of a Court of competent jurisdiction can be reversed or altered unless there is a failure of justice. It cannot be said that where a Court competent to hold an enquiry under this section holds a joint enquiry without proof of association, it loses its competency. The decision of the Privy Council must be applied to cases where the non-observance of the provisions of law affects the jurisdiction of the Court itself.

15. Admissibility of confession of a co-accused in a joint inquiry.—Persons against whom proceedings are being taken jointly under this section cannot be said to be on their joint trial for the same offence within the meaning of S. 30 of the Evidence Act. But where once the prosecution has made out a reasonable case for dealing with several persons in the same inquiry, any evidence which would be relevent to the charge of being habitual offenders would be admissible; and on this ground it has been held that a statement made by a co-accused which is in the nature of a confession and contains incriminating matters against the other is admissible in evidence against the other accused.[1] But confessions made by a co-accused in a prior criminal case cannot be used in proceedings under this section against the others.[2]

16. Suit for malicious prosecution.—A person called upon to furnish security under this chapter is not charged with any offence.[1] It has accordingly been held by the High Court of Madras,[2] that no action for malicious prosecution lies in respect of action taken under this section on a petition presented by a private individual as there is no prosecution for any offence in such a case. The Chief Court of Oudh[3] has, however, taken a contrary view and held that an action for malicious prosecution lies in such a case.

1. Final Order for security.—The Magistrate, as already seen in Note 2 to the last preceding section, is bound to hold a judicial inquiry as to the truth or otherwise of the information upon which he has instituted proceedings under this Chapter. Where, as a result of such inquiry, the Magistrate finds that it is necessary that the person in respect of whom the inquiry is made should execute a bond for keeping the peace or for maintaining good behaviour, as the case may be, he should pass an order under this section. The Magistrate is bound to consider in the exercise of his judicial discretion as to whether an order for

284. The penalty of such bond, which shall be in the form (D) given in the Appendix or to the like effect, shall be fixed with a due regard to the circumstances of the case and the means of the party, and the amount in which the sureties shall be bound shall not exceed the said penalty.

Consequence not complying with order of Magistrate to enter into a bond.

288. If the Magistrate or other Officer as aforesaid shall be satisfied that it is necessary for the preservation of the peace to take a bond from such person with or without security, he shall make an order accordingly, and if the person shall fail to comply with the order, it shall be lawful for the Magistrate or other Officer as aforesaid to commit him to jail.

security is really necessary[1] and should give valid reasons for his finding.[2] He cannot bind over a person, for instance, on the hypothesis that if certain things happen he may commit a breach of the peace.[3] Nor can he bind over one person in order to prevent a breach of the peace by another.[4] The procedure prescribed by the last preceding section of this chapter should be duly followed before an order can be passed under this section.[5]

The section empowers the Magistrate to direct the person proceeded against to execute a bond for keeping the peace or for maintaining good behaviour. It does not authorize him, for instance, to pass an order that the person directed to furnish security should not enter his village and that if he were to do so, the order for security should be enforced against him.[6]

Where the Magistrate passes an order for security under this section, the person ordered to furnish it should be given sufficient time to furnish the same.[7]

It is only when he fails to furnish security within such time that he can be ordered to be imprisoned under S. 123, infra. The section does not authorise the award of imprisonment in anticipation of default in furnishing security.[8]

An order binding over a person under this section is not an order convicting him of any offence[9] and hence it has been held that his name cannot be entered in the surveillance register.[10]

2. Terms of security to correspond with the order under S. 112—Proviso 1.—The final order for security under this section must correspond with the preliminary order and notice issued under S. 112. The Magistrate cannot, in the final order, increase the amount of security[1] or alter the nature thereof[2] or impose fresh conditions[3] or increase the period for which the security should remain in force[4] at variance with the terms as to security contained in the order under S. 112.

S. 118, Notes 3—5.

3. Amount of security—Proviso 2.—The object of taking security is not to punish a person and send him to jail or to collect revenue for the Government; the section being preventive in its nature, the amount should be fixed in such a manner as to afford a fair and reasonable chance of compliance so as not to make the alternative of imprisonment unavoidable.[1] The character and reputation of a person and the degree of danger to be apprehended by him to the community are no doubt elements to be considered by the Court in fixing the amount of security, but they are not the sole and guiding factors.[2] The amount should be fixed according to the ability of the person ordered to furnish security, having regard to his means and station in life, and should not go beyond a sum for which there is a fair probability of his being able to find out the security.[3] The Magistrate is bound to exercise a sound and judicial discretion in fixing the amount of the security having regard to the circumstances of the case. Where the amount fixed is excessive and beyond the means of the person directed to furnish security, the High Court can interfere in revision and reduce the amount of security.[4]

4. Period of security.—The period for which security can be demanded is prescribed in the various sections, viz., Ss. 106 to 110. See also the undermentioned cases.[1]

5. Form and contents of Bond for security.—Forms 10 and 11 of Schedule V of the Code prescribe the forms in which a bond for keeping the peace and for maintaining good behaviour respectively should be executed.[1] The bond contemplated is a bond for an amount which is the one that is ascertained in the final order under this section. There is no authority for requiring the sureties each to execute a separate bond for the same amount as is demanded from the person bound over.[2] The bond is discharged on forfeiture by payment of the amount due either by the principal or the surety.[3]

The form prescribed for the bond merely requires a written undertaking by the sureties that in case of default by the person ordered to be bound over they will be liable. Neither the present section nor the forms prescribed contemplate the furnishing of a registered hypothecation bond offering as security any property.[4] Nor is the Magistrate authorised to direct the security to be deposited in cash.[5]

The Code does not authorize the execution of a bond by the sureties alone without there being at the same time a personal recognizance by the person sought to be proceeded against.[6]

6. Power of Court to impose conditions on sureties.—The primary consideration in accepting a surety is to see whether he is likely to fulfil the undertaking given by him.[1] The Magistrate should not act arbitrarily and impose conditions and restrictions on the sureties which are not reasonable and which are not necessary for the object in view.

See Note 5 to S. 112 and Note 5 to S. 122. Also S. 123.

7. Power of Court to direct a fresh bond to be executed on forfeiture of the original security.—A person cannot be required, without fresh proceedings being taken against him, to execute a fresh bond a second time where in consequence of a breach the original security has been forfeited. There is no provision in the Code for the renewal of a bond executed under this section.[1]

8. Power of Court to review a final order for security under the section.—A Magistrate has no power to review a final order for security passed under this section. He cannot thus increase the amount of security fixed in the final order by means of a subsequent order on the ground that the preliminary order under S. 112 directed security for a larger amount than that ordered in the final order and that the Magistrate has overlooked that fact.[1]

9. Bond by a minor—Proviso 3.—Proviso 3 enacts that where the person ordered to furnish security is a Minor, no bond need be executed by him personally but that the bond should be executed only by his sureties. The reason for such a provision is the legal incompetence of a minor to enter into a contract.[1] As to whether the principle of this Proviso applies to a bond under S. 562 of the Code see the following cases[2] and also Notes to S. 562.

10. Appeal.—Prior to the amendment of S. 406 of the Code in 1923 a right of appeal was given only in respect of an order for security to maintain good behaviour and consequently it was held that an order directing security to keep the peace was not appealable.[1] Under the newly amended S. 406 of the present Code an order for keeping the peace as well as for maintaining good behaviour are both appealable. There was also a doubt prior to the said amendment as to whether an appeal lay to the District Magistrate where there had been a reference to the Sessions Judge under S. 123 of the Code.[2] The doubt has been set at rest by the newly enacted second proviso to S. 406 of the Penal Code which clearly shows that there is no right of appeal in such a case. Further the appeal itself lies now to the Sessions Judge and not to the District Magistrate except where the latter is specially empowered to entertain appeals.[3]

The Code does not provide for a further or second appeal to the High Court against the order of the appellate Court under S. 406. The Local Government has no right of appeal to the High Court under S. 417 of the Code against an order of the Sessions Judge setting aside in appeal an order directing security under this section as the appellate order is not one of acquittal within the meaning of S. 417. But the Local Government can move the High Court in revision.[4]

Duties and powers of the appellate Court.—The appellate Court must show by its judgment that it has duly weighed and examined the evidence for and against the appellant.[5] As to the powers of the appellate Court see Notes to S. 423 of the Code and the following cases.[6] It has been held in the undermentioned case[7] that it is not competent for the appellate Court to enhance the amount of security demanded by the trial Court.

11. Revision.—An order passed in appeal against an order passed under this section can be revised by the High Court.[1] The High Court is not

The High Court will not interfere in revision in the following cases:—

(1) Where there is other remedy open and available to the applicant[14] or, having had that remedy, he has failed to avail the same.[15]

(2) Where the procedure of the lower Court is merely irregular and the irregularity has not resulted in prejudice and has not occasioned in any failure of justice.[16]

(3) Where the finding of fact of the lower Court is based on the demeanour of a witness.[17]

12. Reference to the High Court under S. 435.—Section 435 of the Code enables a Sessions Judge to call for the record of proceedings under S. 110, taken before an inferior Criminal Court within his jurisdiction and make a reference to the High Court.[1]

13. Letters Patent Appeal.—Proceedings taken for binding over a person under this chapter have been held to be criminal trials within the meaning of Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent and consequently no appeal lies under that clause from the judgment of a single Judge of the High Court dealing with a revision petition arising in such proceedings. The portion of the Letters Patent commencing with Cl. 22 which deals with criminal jurisdiction does not also give a right of appeal against an order of a single Judge acting in revision.[1] (See the newly amended Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent which clearly excludes a right of appeal in respect of a sentence or order passed in the exercise of Criminal Jurisdiction).

14. Appeal to Privy Council.—An order of the High Court affirming an order directing a person to furnish security under this section has been held to be not appealable to the Privy Council under Cl. 41 of the Letters Patent.[1]

1. Necessity for bond.—Where on an inquiry under S. 117, it is found, that the information, upon which action was taken is not true, or that no evidence is forthcoming to prove the same, the person proceeded against should be discharged.[1] The mere fact that a person lent money to one side of a faction[2] or that he, being a Muhammadan sent for a Pandit and started a school to teach Sanskrit[3] or that he was charged for false imprisonment[4] or that one of his servants had been fined for assault and the police apprehended a breach of the peace[5] or that extra judicial information had been obtained from conversations, with respectable persons out of Court, of the person's bad character[6] is not a ground for ordering him to give security.

2. 'Discharge'.—The word 'discharge' in this section has been used in a non-technical sense and means merely a 'permission to depart'. It is not used in the technical sense of 'discharge' as opposed to 'acquittal' of an offence.[1]

A discharge under this section is not a "discharge" or "acquittal" within the meaning of S. 250, infra, and no compensation can be awarded under it.[2]

3. Further Inquiry.—There was a conflict of opinion before the amendments of 1923 as to whether a further inquiry could be ordered under S. 437 (now S. 436) where a person had been discharged under this section.[1] The conflict arose from the fact that that section used the words "accused persons" and the question was whether a person proceeded against under this chapter was an "accused person". The said S. 437 has, after the amendment of 1923 been renumbered as S. 436 and the words "person accused of an offence" have been substituted for the words "accused person" with the result that it is now clear, that the section has no application to persons proceeded against under this chapter inasmuch as they are not charged with any offence. No further inquiry can therefore now be ordered against a person discharged under this section.[2] But a discharge under this section is no bar to a second case being instituted on fresh material.[3]

1. Legislative Changes.—

(1) Difference between the Code of 1861 and that of 1872—

There was no provision corresponding to this section in the Code of 1861. It was first introduced in the Code of 1872.

(2) Difference between the Codes of 1872 and 1882—

There was no express provision of law in the Code of 1872, corresponding to the second paragraph of this section. It was introduced in the Code of 1882.

(3) Difference between the Code of 1882 and that of 1898.—

The words "unless the Magistrate, for sufficient reason, fixes a later date" were newly added in para. 2 of the section by the Code of 1898.

2. Commencement of the period of security.—Section 106 provides for an order being passed for security for keeping the peace on conviction for certain offences. Section 118 provides for an order being passed for security for keeping the peace, in other cases and for security for good behaviour. This section deals with the commencement of the period for which security has been ordered to be given under Ss. 106 or 118. If at the time of passing the order the person concerned is sentenced to or is undergoing a sentence of imprisonment, the period will commence on the expiration of the sentence (sub-S. 1).[1] If before the expiry he is convicted of another offence and sentenced to a fresh term of imprisonment the period will not commence until the expiry of both imprisonments.[2] In other cases it will commence on the date of the order unless a later date is fixed for sufficient reasons (sub-S. 2). The suspect has time to furnish the required security up to the date on which the period of security would commence and therefore the Magistrate cannot pass an order under S. 123 for his detention in default of security before that date.[3] Where

3. "Unless the Magistrate, for sufficient reason fixes a later date". —If at the time of the order for security the suspect is not sentenced to or is not undergoing any sentence of imprisonment, the Magistrate may in the exercise of his discretion, grant time for furnishing the security if there are sufficient reasons for doing so.[1] It has been held by the Judicial Commissioners Court of Sind that "sufficient reasons" must mean sufficient reasons existing on the date of the order for security. Consequently according to that Court, when time is granted to the suspect to furnish security, but before the expiry of such time, he is convicted of a substantive offence and sentenced to imprisonment, the Court has no power either under Cl. (1) or Cl. (2) of this section to extend the time for security till the expiry of the sentence. An order for detention must be made under S. 123 immediately on the expiry of the time allowed for security and such detention will run concurrently with the imprisonment he is undergoing for the substantive sentence.[2]

4. Second order for security during the subsistence of a previous one.—A security bond once given, is sufficient for that purpose as long as it is in force in respect of every act of the person bound over breaking any of its conditions. A second order to give further security during the continuance of the first one is not contemplated by law. But if upon expiry of the first order the dispute still exists, a further security may be demanded on fresh proceedings properly taken.[1]

5. "Shall commence on the date of such order"—Sub-S. (2).—The period of security is to be calculated from the date of the order under S. 118 i.e., the final order and not from the date of the preliminary order.[1] Where at the time of the final order for security, the suspect is not sentenced to or is undergoing a sentence of imprisonment the period for which such security is required will commence on the date of the order. A subsequent sentence of imprisonment passed on the suspect will not enable a Magistrate to order that the unexpired portion of the imprisonment in default of security should be reserved after the expiry of the subsequent sentence.[2] Similarly where the Magistrate fixes a later date for the furnishing of the security under sub-S. (2), and before such date the suspect is sentenced to imprisonment for an offence committed by him before the date of such order, it is not competent for the

1. What constitutes breach of the bond to keep the peace.—Form No. 10 of Sch. V, infra shows that the person ordered to give security to keep the peace should bind himself not to commit a breach of the peace or do any act that may probably occasion a breach of the peace.[1] The word "probably" limits the forfeiture of the bond to cases in which a breach of the peace is the probable and not a possible result of the act of the person bound.[2] In each case it is for the Court to judge of the character of the act which is alleged to be likely to cause a breach of the peace.[2-a] The mere fact that an offence has been committed by the person bound will not be a breach of the bond to keep the peace unless such offence causes or will probably occasion a breach of the peace. Thus a conviction for theft[3] or wrongful confinement and extortion[4] unattended with any breach of the peace; or a secret attempt to poison a person[5] or the abduction of a woman[6] will not be a breach of the bond to keep the peace. On the other hand, it is not necessary that any offence should have been committed at all in order to entail a breach of the bond.[7] But the mere filing of a civil suit will not entail a forfeiture of the bond. Where some Hindus who were bound over to keep the peace under S. 107, owing to a dispute between them and certain Muhammadans regarding the location of a slaughter house, brought a civil suit for an injunction, it was held that the institution of the suit, though provocative would not justify a forfeiture of the bond inasmuch as the institution of such suit was not a wrongful act and it is not the intention of the legislature to prevent persons from seeking to enforce their rights in civil Courts.[8] It is immaterial, in order to constitute a breach of the bond, whether the person bound over, did the act, involving such breach himself, or instigated others to do it[9] or whether he committed the breach in respect of the person at whose instance the bond was taken, or in respect of any other person.[10] But the mere fact, that the person bound over, acted as a 'Muktear' of one of two parties for whose benefit the breach of peace took place, will not constitute a breach of the bond.[11]

2. What constitutes a breach of the bond for good behaviour.—In the case of a bond executed by a person binding himself to be of good behaviour, there will be a breach of the bond only if he commits, or attempts to commit, or abets the commission of any offence punishable with imprisonment. Thus the commission of an offence of hurt or grievous hurt[1] or of assault[2] or of criminal trespass[3] or of an offence under the Gambling Act[4] would amount to a breach of the bond. It has been held by the Allahabad High Court that the offence need not be ejusdem generis with (i.e., of the same kind as) that for which the person was bound over.[5] But a contrary view has been taken by the Lahore High Court.[5-a] Nor need he have been convicted of such offence. The reason is that the word "commission" in this section does not necessarily imply a conviction. If evidence is produced to show the commission of the offence, there will be a breach of the bond.[6]

There will be no breach of the bond where no offence has been committed. Thus a bond cannot be forfeited in the following cases:—

(1) Where the person bound over was found in possession of costly clothes for which he could not satisfactorily account for, but there was no proof that he had actually stolen them.[7]

(2) Where he was found in joint possession of counterfeit jewellery with his companions.[8]

(3) Where he was found concealing himself under suspicious circumstances in a lonely and abandoned watermill and was unable to give a satisfactory explanation of himself.[9]

(4) Where there was only a suspicion of his having committed some offence for which he was ordered to furnish security a second time.[10]

There can be no breach of the bond where the offence complained of was committed prior to the date on which the bond was executed.[11]

3. "Wherever it may be committed".—The commission of an offence punishable with imprisonment wherever it may be committed entails a forfeiture of the bond, and is not confined to the District in which the person was bound over. It is not necessary that the offence which constitutes a breach of the bond should have been committed within the District in which the person was bound over. It may have been committed anywhere. Thus where the bond is executed in one district and the accused is subsequently convicted of assault in another district there is a breach of the bond, and the Magistrate of the former district can proceed against him under S. 514.[1] The default in the undertaking to be of good behaviour should however be in respect of His Majesty or His Majesty's subjects. Form No. 11 of Sch. V shows that the person ordered to give security should enter into a bond binding himself to be of good behaviour to "Her Majesty and to all her subjects during the said term". Thus a conviction in the State of Kapurthala under S. 457 of the Penal Code in respect of a subject of that Native state was held not to amount to a breach of the bond.[2] But if the offence is committed in a Native State against a British Subject it would amount to a breach of the bond.[3]

4. Breach of Bond executed by sureties.—A breach of the surety bond for good behaviour is committed when the person bound commits or attempts to commit or abets the commission of any offence punishable with imprisonment.[1] As to the circumstances in which the bond can be forfeited and the surety made liable see S. 514, infra.

4-A. Amount of surety's bond.—A surety cannot be required to execute a bond for an amount greater than that for which the principal is required to execute a bond.[1]

5. Construction of bond.—The terms of a penal bond such as a bond to keep the peace or for good behaviour must be construed literally and strictly.[1] Hence where by mistake a bond for good behaviour was taken, instead of one for keeping the peace, from a person, who was ordered to furnish security to keep the peace, it was held the bond was invalid and could not be forfeited, as the two bonds are different in their nature and scope.[2] A similar rule was applied where a bond for keeping the peace was taken instead of one for good behaviour.[3]

6. Fresh security if can be demanded on forfeiture of bond.—See S. 514-A, infra.

1. Legislative Changes.—

(1) There was no section corresponding to this in the Code of 1861.

(2) Difference between the Codes of 1872 and 1882—

The wards 'for reasons to be recorded by the Magistrate' did not occur in the Code of 1872.

(3) Difference between the Codes of 1882 and 1898—

The words "for good behaviour" which occurred after the word "surety" in S. 122 of the Code of 1882 was omitted in S. 122 of this Code as it stood before 1923.

(4) Amendment of 1923—

The present section was substituted for the old section, by S. 20 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (amendment) Act XVIII of 1923.

2. "Magistrate".—The power to accept or reject sureties is vested in the Magistrate. A Sessions Judge exercising jurisdiction under S. 123, infra has no power to accept or reject sureties.[1]

The word 'Magistrate' means the Magistrate, who passed the order under Ss. 112 and 118, supra, and includes his successor in office.[2] See S. 559, sub-S. (1).

3. Discretion of Court in refusing or rejecting sureties as unfit.— The word "may" shows that the Magistrate has a discretion in the matter of refusing to accept or of rejecting a surety.[1] The discretion, is, however, not arbitrary or absolute but a judicial one[2] as is made clear by the section which requires the Magistrate to hold an independent inquiry into the matter[3] to record the substance of the evidence adduced in such inquiry, to consider such evidence and then to refuse or reject the surety recording his reasons for doing so. In the exercise of such discretion the Magistrate should not demand impossible conditions to be satisfied.[4]

S. 122. Notes 4—5.

4. "Reject sureties previously accepted".—Prior to the framing of the new section in 1923, it was held that a Magistrate could not reject a surety who had been accepted.[1] The present new section expressly permits such rejection.

5. Grounds of rejection of surety.—It has been seen in Note 5 to S. 112, ante that an order under Ss. 112 or 118 cannot set forth any further condition than what may be comprised in the words "character and class" of the sureties required. But where a surety is offered in pursuance of the order made under Ss. 112 or 118 the Court can reject him on the ground that he is unfit for the purposes of the bond.[1] A surety offered may be unfit for any of the following reasons—

(1) that he is not of the character or class specified in the order. Thus a surety who is himself a suspect or a man of bad character,[2] or is an inhabitant of a village notorious for its bad characters,[3] may be rejected on the ground of unfitness. But the mere fact that the surety was once challaned for theft[4] or even the fact that he was once convicted for an offence under the Penal Code[5] cannot be regarded as rendering him unfit for ever to be surety.

(2) that he is not solvent enough to be able to pay the penalty in case there is a breach of the bond.[6] The solvency must be considered with reference to his properties both moveable and immovable.[6-a] The mere fact that he has not got sufficient moveable property, (though he has got sufficient immovable property) and that in case there is a breach of the bond, the amount can, under S. 514, infra be recovered only from his moveable properties, is not a valid ground for rejecting a surety.[7]

(3) that he is not in a position to influence and control the actions of the persons for whom he is standing as surety. There is however a difference of opinion on the point, one set of decisions holding that it is a valid ground for rejecting a surety as unfit[8] and another set of cases holding that it is not.[9] The object of requiring security in these cases is not to fill the jails with bad characters[10] or to obtain money for the Crown by the forfeiture of recognisance,[11] but to bring reasonable pressure on the suspects to respect the law[12] and to ensure that they shall be of good-behaviour.[13] A surety executing a bond in terms of Form 11, Sch. V, in fact undertakes thereby to guarantee the good conduct of his principal, and his fitness to stand as surety must accordingly be judged from this stand point also[14] and not merely from the standpoint of his pecuniary fitness alone.[15] But the control which a surety is expected to exercise over his principal is moral control and is not a physical control.[16]

The fact that the surety offered is living in a distant place may be taken into consideration in coming to a conclusion as to whether he will be able to have any control or influence over the accused. If he is living at such a distance that he will not be able to do so, he may be rejected as unfit.[17] But the mere fact that he is living at a distance is not by itself sufficient to conclude that he will not be able to have any control or influence over the accused and cannot render the surety offered unfit.[18] The Court has to look into all the circumstances of each case on its own merits and come to a judicial conclusion as to whether the distance under the circumstances of the case, is such that the surety cannot have any influence or control over the accused.[19] Thus where the sureties, though living at a distance, were prepared to take the suspects as their tenants and would therefore have an opportunity of preventing them from getting into mischief, it was held that the sureties should be accepted.[20] S. 122, Notes 5—6.

Similarly where the surety undertook to live with the accused in their village and to keep them within his observation it was held that he might be accepted.[21]

Where the sureties offered are solvent and respectable and no other ground of unfitness is shown, they should be accepted.[22] The following grounds are not valid grounds for rejecting a surety as unfit:—

(1) that he is a relation of the suspect[23] or belongs to his caste;[24]
(2) that he is a friend of the suspect and rendered him help in his defence in the proceedings against him;[25]
(3) that he belongs to a particular political party;[26]

(5) that he looks young[28] or is an old man.[29]

6. Enquiry on oath.—Under the section as it stood before the amendment of 1923, the Magistrate was bound, before rejecting a surety as unfit, to record his reasons for doing so. There was no express provision that the Magistrate was bound to hold an enquiry into the fitness of the surety, but it was held by the Courts that he should hold such an enquiry and should base his decision on evidence.[1] It was also held that such enquiry was a judicial one[2] and that the Magistrate was empowered to record evidence on oath in such enquiry.[3] The amendment of 1923 has given legislative effect to the said decisions.

7. "Either himself or by a Magistrate subordinate to him".—Prior to the amendment of 1923 it was uniformally held that a Magistrate who is deciding into the fitness or otherwise of a surety should himself hold the enquiry because the law gave no power to the Magistrate to call upon other persons to exercise the functions which are entrusted to the Magistrate only, and that he had no power to delegate his functions to a Tahsildar or to the Police.[1] The amendment of 1923 makes provision for delegating the power to enquire but only to a Magistrate subordinate to the Magistrate that passed the order. In a case, before the amendment of 1923,[2] it was held that a Magistrate had no authority to delegate his power to a Magistrate in another district to make an enquiry into the sufficiency of the surety. This decision holds good even under the new section since the Magistrate in a District different from that of a Magistrate making the order is not subordinate to the latter.

8. Several sureties—Enquiry as to fitness.—Where there are number of sureties for different accused persons the fitness of each surety should be separately determined. A general order without investigation of the circumstances of each of the sureties is not contemplated by law.[1]

9. Procedure in enquiry.—The section as it stood before the amendment of 1923, did not provide any particular procedure to be adopted before rejecting a surety beyond stating that the reasons for the rejection should be recorded in writing. It was held in the undermentioned case[1] that the Magistrate need not formally record any evidence. The present section as amended sets out clearly the procedure to be adopted in an enquiry into the fitness of a surety.

10. Notice to parties.—Since the enquiry into the fitness of a surety is a judicial proceeding it is necessary that the surety and the person bound over should be given reasonable notice thereof in order to give them a reasonable opportunity of controverting the reasons alleged for rejecting the surety.[1]

11. Appearance by pleader at the enquiry.—Under S. 340 of the Code as it stood before 1923, a person accused before any Criminal Court might, as of right be defended by a pleader. It was held that that section did not apply to security proceedings as the person proceeded against was not an accused person and that, consequently he could not as of right be defended by a pleader though he may in the discretion of the Court, be allowed to be so defended.[1] Under that section as now amended, every person against whom any proceedings are instituted under the Code in any Criminal Court may, of right be defended by a pleader.

12. "After considering the evidence so adduced".—As seen in Note 6 ante the enquiry which a Magistrate holds into the fitness of a surety is a judicial one and the Magistrate should base his conclusions on legal evidence adduced before him.[1] A report by the Police as to the sufficiency or otherwise of a surety is not legal evidence on which the Court could come to a conclusion, as to the fitness of a surety.[2] It can only be treated as an objection by a party to the proceedings which should be supported by evidence. So if the Magistrate wants to consider the information contained in the report, he should examine the Officer that made the report as a witness before him allowing the sureties and the person offering the security to cross examine him as to the contents of the report.[3] Since the sureties are not themselves accused under S. 110, supra, evidence of general repute should not be allowed as against the sureties in an enquiry as to their fitness.[4]

The onus of showing that a surety is a fit person to be accepted is on the person called upon to give security[5] and ordinarily it is discharged by the evidence of the surety himself; but if the Magistrate is not satisfied with the evidence of the surety, he must not reject the surety but call for further evidence because the reasons given by him for rejecting must be a positive reason for believing the surety to be unfit.[6] Since the proceedings are judicial proceedings the Magistrate cannot decide without taking evidence, on the ground that no evidence but that of a particular class of witnesses will satisfy him.[7] For the same reason a Magistrate cannot impose his personal knowledge into the proceeding and reject the sureties merely on his personal knowledge.[8] Similarly, Criminal Courts should not act merely on the certificate of a pleader as to the fitness of a surety.[9]

13. Recording his reasons.—The Magistrate refusing to accept or rejecting a surety, under this section should record his reasons in writing.[1] The intention of the legislature in insisting that a Magistrate should record his reasons in refusing to accept a surety is that the Magistrate should exercise his independent judgment in the matter.[2]

14. Shall make an order refusing to accept, etc.—An order rejecting or refusing to accept a surety should be passed within a reasonable time so as to give the persons proceeded against an opportunity to furnish fresh sureties.[1]

15. Opportunity to furnish fresh security on rejection of surety offered.—Where upon enquiry, a Magistrate refuses to accept or reject already accepted sureties he should afford to the person called on to furnish security a reasonable opportunity to furnish other suitable sureties.[1]

16. Proviso to sub-S. 3.—Referring to the amendment of the section the Select Committee say "We have adopted the suggestion that the provisions of the new S. 122 should be elaborated so as to enable a Magistrate to reject a surety previously accepted by him or by his predecessor. This involves a few consequential amendments in the section which we have made. . . ." This proviso is one of such consequential amendments referred to in the Report of the Select Committee. This proviso read with S. 126-A would show that the object of securing the attendance of the person for whom the surety was given under this proviso is to order him, to furnish fresh security under S. 126-A for the unexpired period of the prior bond.

17. Power of the District Magistrate to reject sureties accepted by subordinate Magistrates.—When a subordinate Magistrate passes an order calling for security and accepts the sureties offered the District Magistrate cannot reject them and cancel their bonds. If he wants to pass orders himself,

18. Revision.—The discretion given to a Magistrate under this section to refuse a surety is a wide one, and the High Court will not interfere lightly with any reasonable exercise of the same.[1] But where the Magistrate has based his discretion not on any independent enquiry by him or on any legal evidence but on some Police Report, the High Court will set aside the order on the ground the Court failed to exercise the discretion judicially.[2] Similarly where the Magistrate has refused to accept sureties on invalid and unreasonable grounds,[3] or where he has not given any reason at all[4] the orders will be set aside in revision.

ed to prison, or, if he is already in prison, be detained in prison, until such period expires or until within such period he gives the security to the Court or Magistrate which or who made the order requiring it, or to the officer in charge of the jail in which the person so ordered is detained.

When such person has been ordered by a Magistrate to give security for a period exceeding one year, such Magistrate shall, if such person does not give such security as aforesaid, issue a warrant directing him to be detained in prison pending the orders of the Court of Session, or, if such Magistrate be a Presidency Magistrate, pending the orders of the High Court; and the proceedings shall be laid, as soon as conveniently may be, before such Court.

Proceedings when to be laid before High Court or Court of Session.

Such Court, after examining such proceedings and requiring any further information or evidence which it thinks necessary, may pass such order on the case as it thinks fit: Provided that the period (if any) for which any person is imprisoned for failure to give security shall not exceed three years.

Imprisonment for failure to give security for keeping the peace shall be simple.

Kind of imprisonment.

Imprisonment for failure to give security for good behaviour may be rigorous or simple as the Court or Magistrate in each case directs.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

Of security for keeping the peace.

Personal recognisance to keep the peace in cases of conviction.

such Court or Magistrate, may, in addition to any other order passed in the case, direct that the person so convicted be required to execute a formal engagement, in a sum proportionate to his condition in life and the circumstances of the case, for keeping the peace during such period as it may appear proper to fix in each instance, not exceeding one year if the sentence or order be passed by a Magistrate, or three years if the sentence or final order be passed by a Court of Session, with a provision that, if the same be not given, the person required to enter into the engagement shall be kept in simple imprisonment for any time not exceeding one year if the order be passed by a Magistrate, or three years if the order be passed by the High Court or by a Court of Session, unless within such period such person execute such formal engagement as aforesaid.

* * * * * * *

(3) Such Court, after examining such proceedings and requiring from the Magistrate any further information or evidence which it thinks necessary, may pass such order on the case as it thinks fit: S. 123.

Provided that the period (if any) for which any person is imprisoned for failure to give security shall not exceed three years.

(3-A) If security has been required in the course of the same proceedings from two or more persons in respect of any one of whom the proceedings are referred to the Sessions Judge or the High Court under sub-section (2), such reference shall also include the case of any other of such persons who has been ordered to give security, and the provisions of sub-sections (2) and (3) shall, in that event, apply to the case of such other person also, except that the period (if any) for which he may be imprisoned shall not exceed the period for which he was ordered to give security.

Security to keep the peace.

490. Whenever it appears necessary to require security for keeping the peace, in addition to the personal recognizance of the party so convicted, the Court or Magistrate empowered to require a personal recognizance may require security in addition thereto, and may fix the amount of the security-bond to be executed by the surety or sureties; with a provision that, if the same be not given, the party required to find the security shall be kept in simple imprisonment for any time not exceeding one year if the order be passed by the Magistrate of the District, Magistrate of a Division of a District, or by a First Class Magistrate or three years if the order be passed by the High Court or by Court of Session.

Non-compliance with order to give bond.

497. If the Magistrate is satisfied that it is necessary for the preservation of the peace to take a bond from such person with or without security, he shall make an order accordingly; and if such person fails to comply with the order, the Magistrate may order him to be kept in simple imprisonment until he furnish the same.

Time for which person may be bound to keep peace.

498. The period for which the Magistrate may bind a person to keep the peace, with or without security, shall not exceed one year.

Limit of imprisonment under S. 497.

When a person is imprisoned under section four hundred and ninety-seven, he shall not be detained by authority of the Magistrate beyond the term of one year, and shall be released whenever, within that term, he complies with the order.

If such person fails to give a bond with security if required, for his keeping the peace for such further period as the Magistrate, under the orders of the Court of Session, directs, he may be kept in simple imprisonment for such further period, or until, within that period, he gives such bond.

S. 123. (3-B). A Sessions Judge may in his discretion transfer any proceedings laid before him under sub-section (2) or sub-section (3-A) to an Additional Sessions Judge or Assistant Sessions Judge, and upon such transfer, such Additional Sessions Judge or Assistant Sessions Judge may exercise the powers of a Sessions Judge under this Section in respect of such proceedings.

(4) If the security is tendered to the officer in charge of the jail, he shall forthwith refer the matter to the Court or Magistrate who made the order, and shall await the orders of such Court or Magistrate.

Kind of imprisonment.

(5) Imprisonment for failure to give security for keeping the peace shall be simple.

Proceedings to be laid before Court of Session.

507. If a person required to furnish security under the provisions of the last preceding section does not furnish the same, or offers sureties whom the Magistrate sees fit to reject, the proceedings shall be laid, as soon as conveniently may be, before the Court of Session.

Such Court, after examining such proceedings and requiring any further information or evidence which it thinks necessary, may pass orders on the case, either confirming, modifying or annulling the orders of such Magistrate, as it thinks proper.

Court of Session may require security for period not exceeding three years.

508. If the Court of Session does not think it safe to direct the immediate discharge of such person, it shall fix a period for his detention, not exceeding three years, in the event of his not giving the security required from him.

Imprisonment in default of security.

510. In the event of any person required to give security under the provisions of this chapter failing to furnish the security so required, he shall be committed to prison until he furnish the same.

Term of imprisonment.

Provided that no such person shall be kept in prison for a longer period than that for which the security has been required from him.

Imprisonment under this section may be rigorous or simple as the Court or Magistrate in each case directs.

Security to keep the peace.

281. In cases in which it may appear necessary to require security for keeping the peace, in addition to the personal recognizance of the party so convicted, it shall also be lawful to the Court or Magistrate or other officer as aforesaid, empowered to require a penal recognizance under the last preceding section, to require security in addition thereto and to fix the amount of the security bond to be executed by the surety or sureties; with a provision, that, if the same be not given, the party required to find the security shall be kept in custody for any time not exceeding one year if the order be passed by the Magistrate of the District or other officer exercising the powers of a Magistrate, or three years if the order be passed by the Sudder Court or by a Court of Session.

(6) Imprisonment for failure to give security for good behaviour shall, where the proceedings have been taken under Section 108, be simple, and, where the proceedings have been taken under Section 109 or, Section 110 be rigorous or simple as the Court or Magistrate in each case directs. 288. If the Magistrate or other officer as aforesaid shall be satisfied that it is necessary for the preservation of the peace to take a bond from such person with or without security, he shall make an order accordingly; and if the person shall fail to comply with the order, it shall be lawful for the Magistrate or other officer as aforesaid to commit him to jail.

289. The period for which the Magistrate or other officer as aforesaid may bind a person to keep the peace with or without security, shall not exceed one year. When a person shall be committed to jail under the last preceding section, he shall not be detained by authority of the Magistrate or other officer as aforesaid beyond the term of one year, and shall be released whenever he shall comply with the order within that term.

Limit for confinement.

290. Whenever it shall appear to the Magistrate or other officer as aforesaid that it is necessary for the preservation of the peace to bind a person beyond the term of one year, he may, before the expiration of the first year, record his opinion to that effect and the grounds thereof, and may refer the case for the orders of the Court of Session, and such Court, after examining the proceedings of the Magistrate or other officer as aforesaid and making such further enquiry as such Court may think necessary, may, if it shall see cause, authorize the Magistrate or other officer as aforesaid to extend the term for a further period not exceeding one year, and if the party shall fail to give a bond, with security if required, for his keeping the peace for such further period as the Magistrate or other officer as aforesaid shall direct under the orders of the Court of Session, he may be kept in confinement for such further period or until he shall give such bond within that period.

Extension of period of confinement.

298. If the person required to furnish security, as provided in the last preceding section, shall not furnish the security so required, the proceedings shall be laid, as soon as conveniently may be, before the Court of Session, which, after examining them and requiring any further information or evidence which it may judge necessary, shall be competent to pass orders on the case, either confirming, modifying, or annulling the orders of the Magistrate or other officer as aforesaid as it may judge proper.

Case to be laid before the Court of Session.

299. If the Court of Session shall not think it safe to direct the immediate discharge of such person, it shall fix a limited period for his detention, not exceeding three years, in the event of his not giving the security required from him.

Court of Session may require security not exceeding three years.

Proviso.

301. In the event of any person required to give security under the provisions of the foregoing sections, failing to furnish the security so required, he shall be committed to prison until he furnishes the same:

Provided that no party shall be kept in prison for a longer period than that for which the security has been required from him.

S. 123, Notes 1—2.

Difference between the Codes of 1861 and 1872—

In cases falling under what corresponds to S. 106 of the present Code, where only a personal recognisance was taken from the accused without sureties no imprisonment was provided for, in default of giving such recognisance.[1] This omission was supplied in S. 489 of the Code of 1872.

Difference between the Codes of 1872 and 1882—

Under the Codes of 1861 and 1872 where a default was made in furnishing security for good behaviour, no imprisonment could be awarded on the defaulter except on a reference to the Sessions Court, whether the period of security did or did not exceed one year. Under the Code of 1882 a reference to the Sessions Court was necessary only when the period of security whether for keeping the peace or for good behaviour, exceeded one year.

Difference between the Codes of 1882 and 1898—

(1) The required security could under the Code of 1882 be given to the Court or the Magistrate who made the order or to the officer in charge of the jail in which the person ordered to furnish security is detained. Under the present sub-S. (4) of the section if the security is tendered to the officer in charge of the jail he can only refer the matter to the Court or Magistrate who made the order.

Amendment of 1923—

(1) Sub-S. 3-a and 3-b were newly added.

(2) Imprisonment in default of security for good behaviour in proceedings under Ss. 108 or 109 had to be simple.

Amendment by Act 10 of 1926—

Power to award rigorous imprisonment in default of security in proceedings under S. 109, also was provided for.

2. Scope of section.—The purpose of the security sections is not that the persons proceeded against should be sent to or kept in jail.[1-a] Nor is it the intention of the Legislature in prescribing imprisonment in default of security that a person called upon to furnish security should be punished for not being able to do so. The object is that the safeguard which the security was intended to provide for should be provided for by his detention in custody,[1] any attempt therefore to use the section for punishment of past offences is wrong and is not sanctioned by law.[2] A person imprisoned under this section is not imprisoned for any offence and escape from custody while under such imprisonment will therefore fall only under S. 225-B not under S. 224 or S: 225 of the Penal Code.[3] Imprisonment under this section not being for an offence cannot be taken into account for purpose of S. 75 of the Penal Code,[4] and for the same reason a youth ordered to be imprisoned under S. 123 cannot be sent under S. 399 to a Reformatory school, the order of imprisonment not being a sentence within the meaning of that section.[5] Where a person is ordered to give security under S. 106 the imprisonment in default does not form part of the substantive sentence so as to give the accused a right of appeal where none existed.[6]

3. "Does not give such security".—Imprisonment under this section cannot be awarded in anticipation of default being made in the furnishing of the required security.[1] It can only follow a failure to furnish security, and not precede a finding that the security is inadequate. Thus it will be illegal to send a person to jail pending the receipt of the report called for as regards the adequacy of the security furnished.[2] Similarly an order directing that the accused should in default of giving security suffer simple imprisonment for one year cannot be upheld.[3] The section contemplates that the accused shall be separately brought up for receiving the order of imprisonment if security is not furnished, that the Court shall, in its judgment, fix a date for furnishing security without any order for imprisonment in the alternative, and that then, if by that date security has not been furnished, the accused shall appear and receive the order of imprisonment.[3-a]

Imprisonment under this section being only preventive and not punitive and being conditional on default of furnishing security, it is only reasonable and just that the accused should be afforded a fair chance at least of complying with the required condition of security.[4] Where after furnishing security the person bound down commits an offence rendering his bond liable to forfeiture, the Magistrate has no authority to order the offender to be imprisoned for the remainder of the term of the security.[5]

4. On or before the date . . . commences.—The security must be given on or before the date on which the period for such security commences.[1] As to when the period of security commences, see S. 120, ante.

5. "Shall be.....committed to prison".—Imprisonment under this section commences from the date fixed for giving security.[1] A warrant for the detention in prison of the person ordered to give security can only be issued before, where the security is not furnished, the commencement of the period of such security.[2] A committal to prison for default in furnishing security should be made on the date on which the period of security commences and not later.

So where a Magistrate passed an order for security in 1907 and the period commenced on the same date as the order, an order for inprisonment awarded in 1909 for failure to furnish the said security was held to be illegal.[3]

An order for imprisonment under this section is a sentence of imprisonment within the meaning of S. 8 of the Madras Borstal School Act of 1926.[3-a]

6. "Or if he is already in prison".—Where an order for security is contemporaneous with a conviction and sentence of imprisonment, the sentence for the substantive offence is to be carried out first and the person to be bound then brought up for the purpose of being bound.[1] It would be illegal for the Magistrate to pass an order of imprisonment for default in furnishing security to run concurrently with some other sentence that the accused is already undergoing.[2]

The reason is that a convict undergoing a sentence of imprisonment cannot be obliged to give security till the term of that imprisonment ends [S. 120, sub-S. (1)] and that under this section no order of imprisonment can be made till there has been a failure to give the required security.[3] Sub-S. (1), however, directs that if any person does not give security on or before the date on which the period of security commences he shall, if in prison, be detained there till such period expires, or until within such period, he gives security. Therefore strictly speaking no further orders are required except on the point whether the imprisonment should be simple or rigorous or on any question that may arise as to the sureties tendered. The procedure to be followed by a Magistrate who orders a person already undergoing imprisonment to furnish security would be to adjourn the case for further orders till after the expiration of the sentence he is undergoing. At the same time he should communicate his order to the jail authorities and ask them to detain the prisoner in jail upon the expiration of the sentence in accordance with sub-S. (1) of the section. The accused should be given all facilities for furnishing security, but he need not be produced before the Magistrate if he informs the jail authorities that he is unable to furnish the required security.[4]

7. Subsequent sentence of imprisonment—Commencement of.—See also Notes to S. 397, infra.

It has been seen in the Notes to S. 120, ante that where before the commencement of the period of security, the person ordered to give security is convicted for a substantive offence and is sentenced to imprisonment, the imprisonment under this section in default of furnishing security, cannot be postponed after the expiration of the substantive sentence but would run concurrently with it. Suppose now that a person is sentenced to imprisonment under this section in default of furnishing security and is thereafter convicted for a substantive offence and sentenced to imprisonment. Is the latter sentence to run concurrently with the former or is it to be postponed till after the expirations of the former sentence? The answer to this question depends on whether the substantive offence was committed prior to the order of imprisonment under this section or whether it was subsequent thereto. In the former case, both the sentences will, by virtue of second proviso to S. 397, run concurrently. As to the latter case, see Notes to S. 397.

8. Term of Imprisonment.—The term of imprisonment should be the same as that for which security is demanded, neither more nor less.[1] If the Magistrate thinks that the term ought to be shortened the proper course is for him to report the matter to the District Magistrate for action under S. 124.[2]

Imprisonment commences from the date on which security is to be given and lasts until such period expires or until, within such period, the required security is given.[3] A Magistrate has no power to keep a man in prison after the date on which the period for which the security ordered had expired.[4] Where a bond is executed after the date on which the period for security commences it should plainly state the date on which the period expires.[5]

The order for imprisonment should run thus: "for one year or until such date within that period as the required security may be furnished". An order directing a person to be imprisoned "until he gives security"[5-a] or "for one year" without any thing more is bad.[6] It was doubted in the undermentioned case[7] whether an order directing that on accused's failure to produce securities to be detained in prison for a period to be specified hereafter, was a legal order.

The term of imprisonment which a Magistrate may order in default of security is not limited by the term of substantive imprisonment for which he is competent to sentence an offender.[8] In other words the liability to be detained in prison in default of giving security is something independent of the powers of the Magistrate in the matter of passing a substantive sentence of imprisonment.

Thus a Second Class Magistrate who is also a sub-divisional Magistrate can bind over a person under S. 106 for a period exceeding 6 months and imprison him for that period in default of giving security although the maximum substantive sentence that he can award is 6 months.[8-a] Similarly, summary Courts are not incompetent to award more than 3 months imprisonment under this section.[9] In computing the period of imprisonment under this section, the period during which the person is released on bail should be deducted.[10]

9. Sub-S. (2). Detention pending orders of Session Court, etc.—Where a Magistrate demands security for a term exceeding one year he cannot sentence the accused to imprisonment in default of giving such security; he is empowered only to issue a warrant directing the said person to be detained in prison pending the orders of the Sessions Judge or of the High Court as the case may be and to submit his proceedings to such Court as soon as possible for orders.[1-a] The order fixing the term of imprisonment which the accused is to undergo on default of furnishing security is to be fixed by such Court and not by the Magistrate.[1] The section is imperative in this respect and an order for imprisonment by the Magistrate himself in such cases is bad on the face of it and cannot be cured by the District Magistrate by reducing the term of security and imprisonment to one year.[2] In the undermentioned cases,[3] however, where an order by a Magistrate for imprisonment for more than one year under this section was confirmed by the Sessions Judge, it was held that the order might, under the circumstances, be taken to be the order of the Sessions Judge himself. Where a Magistrate passed an order for imprisonment under this section for two years, but on appeal to the District Magistrate the latter set aside this order and directed the proceedings to be laid before the Sessions Judge, it was held that the latter could pass orders as to the term for which the accused should be imprisoned for failing to give security.[4]

A Magistrate cannot legally amalgamate Ss. 109 and 110 and require the execution of two bonds for an aggregate period of 18 months and in default of the same being furnished commit the accused to 18 months imprisonment. When such a procedure had been adopted it was held that it was wrong and that, at any rate, the provisions of sub-S. (2) to S. 123 should have been followed.[5]

Where a person ordered to give security for more than one year is at the time of such order undergoing sentence of imprisonment it is premature according to the High Court of Bombay to refer the matter to the Sessions Judge before expiry of the sentence of imprisonment he is undergoing.[6] A contrary view has been taken by a Full Bench of the Chief Court of Lower Burmah according to which, the proceedings should in such a case be referred at once to the Sessions Judge who is not required by law to wait till the expiry of the sentence which the accused may be undergoing.[7]

Where the proceedings are laid before the Sessions Judge under sub-S. (2), and pending orders thereon, the person proceeded against is sent to prison, it has been held that he is really undergoing a sentence of imprisonment and is not merely in detention as an under-trial prisoner.[8]

Until a case is referred for final orders, proceedings in the Magistrates Court are not terminated so as to end the liability of the sureties who had undertaken to be responsible for the attendance of an accused person in the Court of the Magistrate.[9] The whole of the section has reference to the case where default is made in the furnishing of security. If a person ordered to find the security for a period over one year does furnish such security the section does not apply and no reference to the Court of Sessions could be made.[10] In such a case it is the High Court alone that has powers of revision under S. 439, Cr. P. Code.[11]

10. Nature of the proceedings on reference.—It has been held by the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind that the functions of the Sessions Judge before whom proceedings are laid under this section are more of an administrative than of a judicial character.[1] It has also been held that the proceedings are not in the nature of an appeal, and that it is not necessary to deal with the matter as if it were an appeal or write a judgment as if it were an appeal.[2] The whole case is intended to be dealt with by the Sessions Judge as a Court of first instance,[3] and the order passed by him is the separate and substantive order of the Court of Session and not a mere confirmation of the Magistrate's order.[4] The reason is that the Magistrate cannot pass an order of imprisonment in cases which he has to refer and consequently cannot submit any order so passed by him for confirmation. The warrant following the order of the Sessions Judge should proceed from the Sessions Court itself and the Sessions

Judge cannot ask the Magistrate to issue his warrant of imprisonment.[5] It has however been held that the power to accept or reject sureties is vested in the Magistrate and that the Sessions Judge exercising jurisdiction under this section has no power to do so.[6]

S. 123, Notes 10—13.

11. Notice to person proceeded against.—The section itself does not direct the issue of notice of the proceedings to the person against whom they are taken. It has however been held that it is necessary in the ends of justice to give such notice before any order prejudicial to him is passed.[1]

12. Appearance of pleader in proceedings on reference.—A person against whom proceedings are taken under this section may, of right, be defended by a pleader.[1] See also Note 11 to S. 122.

13. Discretion of Court on reference.—Where reference is made under the section to the Sessions Judge, he cannot decline to entertain it on the ground that it is belated,[1] but should deal with the case on the merits.[2] He has a wide discretion to pass such orders as the circumstances of the case require[3] and the Legislature has vested in him all such subsidiary powers as may be necessary for finally disposing of the case.[4] Thus he may, if he considers the Magistrate's order to be proper, pass an order for imprisonment in default of furnishing the required security[5] or he may find that there is no necessity for any security at all[6] or he may impose reasonable conditions regarding the character of the sureties who may be accepted[7] or he may alter the amount or the period of security.[8] The Judge is however bound to hear both sides,[9] consider the evidence, if any adduced by them[10] and then pass orders on the merits. He should examine the proceedings as a Judge, that is to say, with a view to see whether they are according to law and correct procedure, whether the order for security is justified and if so for what period and in what sum security should be demanded.[11] If he confirms the order as to security he should find some ground for doing so. An order merely confirming that of the Magistrate is bad.[12] Nor is it sufficient if he merely finds in general terms that it is in the interests of the community at large that the person proceeded against should be bound over to be of good behaviour.[13]

The Sessions Judge cannot pass an order for imprisonment for a period less than that for which security is called for.[14] Nor can he pass an order that the person proceeded against should merely furnish sureties without himself giving a recognisance.[15]

14. Power to order retrial and remand.—The Sessions Judge has no jurisdiction to treat the reference as an appeal or exercise the powers vested in him as a Court of appeal.[1] He cannot therefore remand the case for further inquiry[2] or order a retrial though he may, under S. 438, infra, refer the case to the High Court for quashing proceedings or for ordering a retrial.[3] He may also require the Magistrate to furnish him with any further information or evidence, but in that case he should make a definite order stating the information or the nature of the evidence required.[4]

15. Order, contents of.—It is open to doubt whether Ss. 367 and 424 dealing with judgments in trials and appeals respectively, apply to orders passed in proceedings under this section, and whether therefore, such orders should contain all the details required by those sections in respect of judgments.[1] Where there are several persons proceeded against, each of them has a right to have his case considered on its own merits and the order should show that this has not been lost sight of.[2]

16. Jurisdiction of Magistrate after reference to accept security.—Where a case has been referred to the Sessions Judge under this section, the seisin of the case is thenceforward with the Sessions Judge and the Magistrate is not competent thereafter to release the accused on bail.[1] The Sessions Judge has however wide powers under S. 498, infra, and can grant bail in such cases.[2] It has, however, been held that where pending a reference under this section to the Sessions Judge security is offered by the accused, it may be accepted by the Magistrate and on such acceptance, the reference automatically ceases.[3] There is a conflict of opinion as to whether when sureties are offered after an order is passed by the Sessions Judge on reference, the Magistrate has power to determine whether the sureties are fit to be accepted. The Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind and the Chief Court of Lower Burma have held that he cannot do so.[4] The High Courts of Calcutta and Patna have, on the other hand, held that he can, and that the Sessions Judge has neither the duty nor the power to test the surety so offered.[5] S. 123. Notes 16—19.

17. Right of appeal from order for security, how affected by reference. —Before the second Proviso was added to S. 406, infra, by the Amending Act of 1923, it was held that the fact that proceedings had been laid before the Sessions Judge under this section did not bar an appeal to the District Magistrate against the order for security under S. 118, but that the right of appeal terminated as soon as the Sessions Judge passed orders in the case under sub-S. (3) of this section.[1] It was further held that the Sessions Judge before proceeding to deal with the reference should satisfy himself whether an appeal had been filed or was about to be filed, and to stay his hands till the disposal of such appeal.[2] Under the new proviso to S. 406 an appeal is barred where there has been a reference under this section to the Sessions Judge. But the right of appeal is, however, revived, if pending disposal of the reference, security is offered and accepted, inasmuch as the acceptance of the security has the effect of automatically terminating the reference.[3] As to the power of the District Magistrate on appeal from an order for security to grant bail pending disposal of the appeal, see S. 406, infra, and notes thereto.

18. Order for imprisonment on reference—Commencement of.—Where a person is ordered by the Magistrate to be detained in prison pending the orders of the Sessions Judge on reference and the latter orders him to imprisonment for failure to give security, the period of imprisonment runs not from the date of the order of the Sessions Court but from the date of the Magistrate's order for detention.[1] See Note 19, infra.

19. "Shall not exceed three years".—The proviso to sub-S. (3) of this section enacts that the period for which any person may be imprisoned for failure to give security shall not exceed three years. When a Magistrate detains a person in prison under sub-S. (2) pending the orders of the Sessions Judge such person is thereby not merely detained in custody as an under-trial prisoner but is undergoing a sentence of imprisonment, the imprisonment having effect from the date on which the warrant was executed by the Magistrate. Hence where the Sessions Judge orders imprisonment for 3 years such order should have effect not from the date of his own order but from that of the Magistrate. Otherwise the proviso will be infringed.[1]

20. Appeal and Revision.—No appeal lies from an order of the Sessions Court under this section.[1] But such order is open to revision by the High Court.[2] A Magistrate is however not competent under S. 438, infra, to refer to the High Court a case in which a Sessions Judge has refused to confirm an order for security. His proper course would be to ask the public prosecutor to move the High Court for revision.[3]

21. Sub-S. 3-B—Transfer of proceedings.—A reference under the section is not a case committed for trial. The jurisdiction conferred by the section is rather the exercise of a power for the prevention of an offence than the trial of a case committed for trial. A joint Sessions Judge appointed to try all cases which may be committed for trial has no jurisdiction to pass orders on a reference under this section.[1] The Code of 1882 used the words "Court of Session". These were substituted by the words "Sessions Judge" by this Code. The change was construed as indicating that it was the intention of the Legislature to limit the power of dealing with references under this section, to Sessions Judges.[2] But it was held by the Calcutta High Court that sub-S. (2) of S. 193 should be liberally interpreted and that additional Sessions Judges are competent to hear references which are transferred to them by Sessions Judges.[3] This is now made clear by the introduction of sub-S. 3-B, which specifically provides for such transfer of proceedings.

22. Kind of imprisonment.—S. 110 being preventive rather than punitive it would appear that in ordinary cases the imprisonment should be simple. The Magistrate has to exercise his discretion and decide on the facts of each case whether the imprisonment should be simple or rigorous.[1] The discretion should be exercised reasonably.[2] In the case of a person who has never been convicted of any offence, an order for rigorous imprisonment would be unreasonable especially when there are no reasons given why with a view to the prisoner's future good behaviour it is desirable that imprisonment should be of the severe kind.[3] A Magistrate has no power to order that a portion of the imprisonment that he orders under S. 123 be spent in solitary confinement.[4]

So far as imprisonment for failure to give security for keeping the peace is concerned, sub-S. (5) provides most clearly that imprisonment shall be

23. Tender of security to Jail Officer—Sub-S. (4).—When the Sessions Court has passed an order under sub-S. 3, and a warrant from the Court has reached the Officer in charge of the Jail, that Officer should, if a person comes to him and offers himself as surety, refer the matter to the Sessions Court, for if the warrant proceeded from the Sessions Court it is that Court which is naturally the authority to which the officer in charge of the jail can make a reference.[1] When security is offered when the person is in jail such security has to be taken by the Magistrate (or Court); it cannot be given at the jail.[2]

24. Detention in Borstal School.—An order of imprisonment under this section is a sentence of imprisonment within the meaning of S. 8 of the Madras Borstal Schools Act of 1926, and it is legal to pass an order of detention in a Borstal School under that Act instead of ordering the imprisonment of the defaulter under this section.[1] The period for which detention in a Borstal School can be ordered, is governed by the provisions of the Borstal Schools Act and may exceed the period for which imprisonment may be ordered under this section.[2]

Unless such person then gives security in accordance with the terms of the original order for the unexpired portion of the term for which he was in the first instance committed or ordered to be detained (such portion being deemed to be a period equal to the period between the date of the breach of the conditions of discharge and the date on which, except for such conditional discharge, he would have been entitled to release), the District Magistrate or Chief Presidency Magistrate may remand such person to prison to undergo such unexpired portion.

A person remanded to prison under this sub-section shall, subject to the provisions of S. 122, be released at any time on giving security in accordance with the terms of the original order for the unexpired portion aforesaid to the Court or Magistrate by whom such order was made or to its or his successor.

1. Legislative History.—

(1) Sub-Ss. 1 and 3 of this section as they stood before they were amended in 1923 correspond to the provisions of S. 124 of the Code of 1882 and to the provisions of Ss. 500, 511 and 512 of the Code of 1872.

(2) Sub-S. 2 was first introduced in the Code of 1898.

(3) By the Amendment Act 18 of 1923, the words "whether by the order ..... subordinate Magistrate" after the word "chapter" in sub-S. (1) have been omitted.

(4) Sub-S. 3 was substituted by the amending Act of 1923 for the old sub-section which had become unnecessary in view of the amendment made in sub-S. 1.

(5) Sub-Ss. 4 to 6 are new.

2. Scope of the section.—S. 123, supra provides that, if any person who has been ordered to give security under S. 106 or S. 118 does not give such security within the period fixed, he shall be committed to prison. This section gives power to the District Magistrate or a Chief Presidency Magistrate to order such person to be released if the Magistrate is of opinion that he may be released without hazard to the community or to any other person.[1]

3. Who may release.—It entirely rests with the District Magistrate or the Chief Presidency Magistrate, who is responsible for the peace of the inhabitants within his jurisdiction, to decide without interference from any

When he must report.

303. In any case in which a Magistrate or other officer as aforesaid shall be of opinion that any person confined under requisition of security for good behaviour by order of a Court of Session, can be safely released without such security, the Magistrate or other officer as aforesaid shall make an immediate report of the case for the orders of the Court which shall have required the person to furnish the security.

It has been held by the High Court of Bombay in the undermentioned case[2] that if a subordinate Magistrate thinks that the term of imprisonment in default of furnishing security should be shortened, the proper course would be to report the matter to the District Magistrate with a view to his taking action under this section.

4. "May be released."—It is not a valid reason for a District Magistrate to refuse to act under this section on the mere ground that an appeal lay from the order requiring security.[1]

It is open to the District Magistrate to arrive at the conclusion, that the person imprisoned under S. 123, supra, may be released under this section, on a consideration of the evidence taken by the subordinate Magistrate.[2]

5. Revision.—It has been already mentioned in Note 3, ante, that it rests entirely with the District Magistrate or Chief Presidency Magistrate to exercise the powers under this section. Therefore, the High Court has no power in revision to direct the District Magistrate or the Presidency Magistrate to take and enquire into any application which may be made to him under this section.[1]

1. Legislative changes.—

(1) Difference between the Code of 1872 and that of 1882: The words "to be recorded in writing" as well as the words "at any time" were for the first time inserted in the Code of 1882.

(2) Difference between the Code of 1882 and this Code: The words "the Chief Presidency" and "or for good behaviour" were newly added on to the section of this Code.

2. Scope of the section.—A person who has been ordered to furnish security under S. 118 for keeping the peace or for good behaviour can, under S. 406, infra, appeal against such order to the Court of Session or the High Court as the case may be or, if the District Magistrate is empowered to hear such appeals, then to such Magistrate. This section gives a special and rather an exceptional power to the District Magistrate or the Chief Presidency Magistrate as the case may be to cancel for sufficient reasons a bond executed under this Chapter.[1] There is a conflict of opinion as to whether and how these powers under these two sections overlap each other for which, see Note 3, infra.

Discharge of recognizances.

The Magistrate or other officer as aforesaid may, if he shall see sufficient cause, discharge any recognizance and surety for keeping the peace taken under the preceding section, and may order the release of the person confined for default in entering into such recognizance or giving such security.

Section 125—Note 2.

(1) (1913) 14 Cri. L. Jour. 546 (554): 37 Mad. 125, Mare Gowd v. Emperor. (1868) 10 Suth. W. R. 40, Anundee Koer Ranee Soonet Koer (Under the Code of 1861 any Magistrate could cancel the order).

S. 125, Notes 3—5.

3. Sufficient reasons, what are.—There is a conflict of opinion on the question whether the grounds on which the Magistrate can act under this section should have arisen subsequent to the date of the order for security or whether they might include even grounds existing even on such date. The High Court of Calcutta[1] and Madras[2] and the Chief Court of the Punjab[3] have taken the view that there is no reason to restrict or qualify the meaning of the words "sufficient reasons" and that a bond can be cancelled even on the ground that the bond should not have been taken at all under the circumstances of the case as it existed on the date of the order for security. The High Court of Allahabad[4] and Patna[5] and the Chief Court of Oudh[6] have taken a contrary view. This view proceeds on the principle that the District Magistrate acts under this section in an executive and not in a judicial capacity,[7] that he does not exercise an appellate or revisional jurisdiction when acting under this section,[8] and that the only ground on which he could cancel the bond is that it having arisen subsequently to the order for security the bond has become no longer necessary.[9] The Nagpur Judicial Commissioner's Court has taken conflicting views on the point.[10] It is submitted that the view of the Calcutta and Madras High Courts is correct.

4. "Cancel any bond."—Reading together Ss. 188 and 121, supra, it is quite clear that the bond contemplated by this section is the bond which has been given by the person against whom the order has been passed under S. 118, and not the bond executed by the surety.[1]

5. "By order of any Court in his district not superior to his Court."—Where proceedings were taken under S. 107, supra, in District N, and then were transferred by order of the High Court to District T, and a First Class Magistrate of the latter district ordered the petitioner to be bound over to keep the peace, and the District Magistrate of the District T cancelled the bond under this section, it was held, that, as the order for security was passed by a Magistrate in District T not superior to the Court of the District Magistrate, the latter had jurisdiction to pass an order under this section.[1] Again, the jurisdiction is not taken away from the District Magistrate to interfere under this section with an order already passed. S. 125, Notes 5—9.

6. Parties if entitled to be heard in proceeding under this section.—It has been held by the High Court of Patna that in dealing with an application under this section the District Magistrate is exercising neither appellate nor revisional powers and that, therefore, it is not incumbent upon him to hear the petitioner or his pleader before disposing of the application.[1] The High Court of Allahabad, without actually deciding whether it would be illegal to make an order without hearing the applicant or his pleader, has held that as a matter of general practice, the parties should be heard before the application is rejected.[2] Where the Magistrate, while he was on tour gave the petitioner a date for hearing, but did not inform him of the place at which it would be heard, it was held by the Chief Court of Punjab that an order of dismissal without hearing the petitioner could not be maintained.[3]

7. Power to remand.—S. 428, infra, dealing with the powers of the appellate Court in appeals under Chapter 31 of the Code, has no application to a proceeding under this section. The District Magistrate cannot, in such a proceeding, therefore remand the case to the Magistrate for further inquiry.[1]

8. Power to demand fresh security.—This section does not enable the District Magistrate to order fresh security to be given where security had been given and accepted by the Subordinate Magistrate.[1]

9. Power to alter terms of bond.—The District Magistrate, under this section, can either cancel the bond or leave it alone. He cannot alter or modify it. In an appeal against an order for security under S. 406, however, the bond may be altered or modified by the appellate Court.[1]

1. Legislative Changes—

Amendment of 1923. Sub-S. (3) to the section has been deleted and re-enacted with an additional clause as S. 126-A, infra.

2. Scope.— This section applies to cases where one person stands surety for the peaceable conduct or good behaviour of another person. The object of this section is to protect the surety who finds that he is unable to control the principal for whom he has given surety.[1]

Section 502, infra deals with cases where a person stands surety for the attendance or appearance of another person released on bail.

4. Surety for good behaviour.—See Ss. 108, 109, and 110.

"EVERY SUCH ORDER SHALL.....AS THE CASE MAY BE"	4

1. Legislative changes.—This section is new.

By the Amending Act XVIII of 1923, sub-S. (3) of S. 126 was re-enacted as S. 126-A with an additional clause added to it.

The words "when a person.....executed by such person" are newly added.

2. Under the proviso to sub-S. (3) of S. 122.—The proviso to sub-S. (3) of S. 122 directs the issue of summons or warrant for the appearance of the person bound over, before a surety previously accepted, is rejected.

3. The Magistrate shall cancel the bond executed by him.—On the appearance of the person bound over to keep the peace or for good behaviour, the Magistrate is bound to cancel the bond.

4. "Every such order shall.....as the case may be."—Ss. 121 to 124 deal with the proceedings to be taken subsequent to orders to furnish security under Ss. 106 and 118. An order under this section to furnish fresh security being deemed to be an order under Ss. 106 or 118, as the case may be, attracts the provisions of Ss. 121 to 124. Therefore, when the effect of an

UNLAWFUL ASSEMBLIES.

127. Any Magistrate or officer in charge of a police-station may command any unlawful assembly or any assembly of five or more persons likely to cause a disturbance of the public peace, to disperse; and it shall thereupon be the duty of the members of such assembly to disperse accordingly.

1. "Any Magistrate."—Any Magistrate can exercise the power conferred under this section anywhere in the district.[1]

2. Officer in charge of a police-station.—Under S. 551 of the Code, police-officers superior in rank to an officer in charge of a police-station may exercise the same powers throughout the local area to which they are appointed, as may be exercised by such officer within the limits of his station. A Sub-Inspector of Police[1] or a Deputy Commissioner of Police[2] can command an assembly to disperse under this section. But a police-officer in charge of a petrol boat is only an officer in charge of an out-post and has no power to disperse an unlawful assembly under this section.[3]

3. "May command."—The command to disperse can be given only in the cases specified in the section. Where the assembly commanded to be dispersed does not come within this section the order to disperse is illegal. The legality of the command depends on the conduct of the assembly preceding the command and not on what followed it.[1]

4. Unlawful Assembly.—The word "unlawful assembly" is defined in S. 141 of the Penal Code as follows:—

"An assembly of five or more persons is designated an 'unlawful assembly', if the common object of the persons composing that assembly is:—

First.—To overawe by criminal force, or show of criminal force, the Legislative or Executive Government of India, or the Government of any Presidency, or any Lieutenant Governor, or any public servant in the exercise of the lawful power of such public servant, or

Second.—To resist the execution of any law, or legal process; or Third.—To commit any mischief or criminal trespass, or other offence; or

Unlawful Assembly to disperse on the order of a Magistrate, etc.

111. A Magistrate or Officer in charge of a Police-Station may command an unlawful assembly to disperse, and it shall thereupon be the duty of the members of such unlawful assembly to disperse accordingly.

S. 127, Notes 5—6.

5. Any assembly of five or more persons.—The words "any assembly" are used as distinguished from "unlawful assembly." So any assembly of five or more persons can be ordered, under this section, to disperse, even if it has assembled for a lawful purpose if it is likely to cause a breach of the peace.[1] Where only three persons moved on carrying flags with the object of drawing a crowd and in fact gathered a crowd around them, it was held that the whole body of men constituted an assembly of 5 or more men within the meaning of this section irrespective of the fact whether the crowd was stationary or moving and even though only three persons were responsible for drawing the crowd.[2]

6. "Likely to cause a disturbance of the public peace."—In the case of an assembly other than an unlawful assembly this section enables a Magistrate or Police-officer, to order the assembly to disperse when he is convinced that it is likely to cause a disturbance of the public peace.[1] It is the fact that such an assembly is likely to cause a disturbance of the public peace that gives jurisdiction to the Magistrate or Police-officer to act under this section.[2] The expression "likely to cause the disturbance of the public peace" has not been defined anywhere, but it is clear that before an assembly can be said to be likely to cause the disturbance of the public peace it must appear that the behaviour of such assembly is such as to indicate that it would be an active party to the disturbance of public peace or that it is reasonably calculated to provoke others to a breach of the peace[3] whether any such assembly was likely to cause a disturbance of the public peace at the time the order to disperse was made, is a question of fact[4] which must be proved by independent evidence. The mere opinion of the officer is not sufficient.[5] In arriving at a conclusion on this point, the conduct and behaviour of the assembly should be considered.[6] S. 127, Notes 6—8.

7. Sub-S. 2.—This sub-section did not exist in the corresponding S. 480 of the Code of 1872. S. 127 of the Code of 1882 was made applicable to the Police in both the Towns of Calcutta and Bombay. But the words "and Bombay" were repealed by S. 2 (1) of the City of Bombay Police Act, 1902 (Bom. Act IV of 1902).

8. Effect of non-compliance with an order under this section.—If the assembly, after being commanded to disperse does not do so, the officer so commanding may forcibly disperse such assembly under the next S. 128. Further in the case of an unlawful assembly the members of such assembly can be charged under S. 145 of the Penal Code and in the case of other assemblies under S. 151 of the Penal Code.[1]

128.* If, upon being so commanded, any such assembly does not disperse, or if, without being so commanded, it conducts itself in such a manner as to show a determination not to disperse, any Magistrate or officer in charge of a police-station, whether within or without the presidency-towns, may proceed to disperse such assembly by force, and may require the assistance of any male person, not being an officer or soldier in Her Majesty's Army or a volunteer enrolled under the Indian Volunteers Act, 1869* and acting as such, for the purpose of S. 128.

1. Legislative changes.—

(1) There was no provision corresponding to this in the Code of 1861 and any police-man appointed under Act V of 1861 could apprehend any of the members of an unlawful assembly.[1]

(2) Difference between the Code of 1872 and 1882:—

(b) The words "not being an officer.....as such" were substituted for the words "other than any European or Native Troops of Her Majesty acting as such."

(c) The words "arresting and confining .....according to law" were substituted for the words "for the purpose of disposing it and arresting the persons who form part of it."

(3) There is no difference between the Code of 1882 and this Code in this respect.

2. Scope of the section.—S. 127 empowers any Magistrate or officer-in-charge of a Police-station to command any unlawful asesmbly to disperse. This section lays down what the Magistrate or officer-in-charge of the Police-station has to do if the assembly disobeys or shows a determination to disobey, such order. This section lays down when civil force is to be used in dispersing the unlawful assembly. Ss. 129 to 131, infra enact under what circumstances military force can be resorted to. The object of these sections is to see that, as far as possible, only minimum force is used in dispersing the assembly. The degree of force which may lawfully be used in the suppression of an assembly depends on the nature of such assembly, for the force used must always be moderated and proportioned to the circumstances of the case and to the end to be obtained.[1]

3. "Such assembly."—The words "such assembly" refer to the assembly specified in S. 127. It must be an unlawful assembly as defined in S. 141 of the Penal Code or an assembly of five or more persons likely to cause disturbance of the peace. Where three persons whose object was to draw a crowd which was likely to cause a breach of the peace refuse to disperse on being commanded to do so and in fact about 60 persons followed them, it was held that the three persons with the other crowd of 60 persons constituted an unlawful assembly.[1]

4. "Officer-in-charge of a Police-station.—See S. 4 (p). It has been held in the undermentioned cases[1] that an officer in charge of a petrol boat who had no greater powers than that of an officer-in-charge of an out-post, and who has no powers of investigation under S. 156, infra, was not an "officer in charge of a Police station" and could not act under this section. A Police-officer who is superior to the officer in charge of a Police station is also entitled to act under this section.[2]

5. Duties of citizens.—This section does not empower the Magistrate or Police-officer to take the assistance of an officer or soldier in Her Majesty's army or of any volunteer enrolled under Act XX of 1869 for dispersing unlawful assemblies. He can only require the assistance of any male person for the said purpose. Every such person is bound to assist the Magistrate or Police-officer.[1] See also S. 42, ante.

(b) Ring-leaders or as many of the persons forming part of it as may be necessary may be arrested and confined.[2]

7. Duties, rights and liabilities of officers acting under this section.—If the Magistrate or officer in charge of a Police station commands an unlawful assembly to disperse and the assembly does not disperse it will be the duty of the police-officer or Magistrate, before resorting to force to arrest the persons who appear to be the leaders of the assembly and see what effect it would have on the assembly. If the assembly still persists in not dispersing, a warning should be given that if they refused to disperse, force would be used.[1] Of course, the section authorises the officer to disperse the assembly by force even without commanding it to disperse, "if it conducts itself in such a manner as to show a determination not to disperse." But great caution should be exercised in exercising the power.

If the officer is competent to act under this section and acts in good faith he is entitled under S. 132, infra, to be protected from prosecution for doing such acts.[2]

In obedience to any order. See Note 9, Pt. 2.

1. Legislative changes.—By Act XXXVIII of 1920 the words "Local Government" were substituted for the words "Governor-General in Council" which stood originally, and the proviso was newly added.

2. Scope of the section.—This section requires that no prosecution shall be instituted against any person for any act purporting to be done under this chapter without the sanction of the competent authority. The object obviously is to protect responsible public servants against the institution of possibly vexatious criminal proceedings in respect of such acts. The policy of the legislature is to afford adequate protection to public servants, to ensure that they are not prosecuted for anything done by them in the discharge of their official duties without reasonable cause. The section should therefore be construed as broadly as it is framed.[1]

3. Distinction between this section and S. 79, Penal Code.—S. 79 of the Penal Code provides that nothing is an offence which is done by any person who is justified by law or who, by reason of a mistake of fact, and not by reason of a mistake of law, in good faith, believes him to be justified by law, in doing it. The protection granted by it is a protection against conviction and applies only when all the facts are known, i.e., when the trial is over. But this operates even before the trial begins. In other words the protection given by this section is one against the trial itself.[1]

4. "Prosecution"—Meaning of.—An inquiry which merely results in the dismissal of a complaint does not amount to a "prosecution" within the meaning of this section.[1]

S. 132, Notes 5—9.

5. "Purporting to be done".—It is enough for the application of the section if a person empowered to act under this chapter purported to act under it. It is not necessary for him, before the question of sanction is raised to prove that there was in fact such an assembly as is contemplated by this chapter.[1] In deciding whether a person purported to act or not the Court is not confined to the complaint and the sworn statement. The reason is that appropriate assertions in the complaint or the sworn statement, even if false, can deprive officers of the protection given by this section and this cannot have been intended by the Legislature.[2]

6. Except with the sanction of the Local Government.—The sanction of the Local Government is a condition precedent to the prosecution of any person empowered to act under this chapter for any act done or purported to have been done by such person under this chapter.[1]

7. Police-officer acting under this chapter.—The power to disperse an unlawful assembly is not given by the Code to any police-officer below the rank of an officer in charge of a police station. Any officer below that rank, e.g., an officer in charge of a petrol boat who purports to act under section 127, supra, is not protected by the provisions of this section.[1]

8. "Good faith".—Under S. 52 of the Penal Code "nothing is said to be done or believed in good faith which is done or believed without due care and attention" This definition applies also to this Code by virtue of S. 4, supra.[1]

The term is to be interpreted relatively to the position of the person doing an act or omission with due regard to the surrounding circumstances.[2] Where a police-officer did not believe it necessary for the public security to desperse an assembly by firing on them, but nevertheless gave orders to shoot with the result that a man was shot dead, it was held that he did not act in good faith.[3]

9. Clause (d).—A police-officer is not protected simply because he obeyed the orders of his superior officer[1] unless the order is one which he is bound to obey. He is not bound to obey an illegal order of the superior officer. Where therefore an order is manifestly illegal and the subordinate has the same opportunities of observing and judging the circumstances as the superior, it is no defence for the former to plead that he obeyed the orders of his superior.[2] A subordinate obeying the orders of his superior will, however, even if the order is illegal, be entitled to protection under S. 76 of the Penal Code, if, by reason of a mistake of fact, he believes, in good faith, to be bound by law to obey it.[3]

10. Whether want of sanction is cured by S. 537.—As has been seen in Note 6, ante, the sanction is a condition precedent, to the institution of a prosecution against any person for an act done under this chapter and consequently, the absence of a sanction is an illegality which cuts at the very root of the prosecution and is not one curable by S. 537.[1]

521. Whenever a Magistrate of the District or a Magistrate of a Division of a District, or, when empowered by the Local Government in this behalf, a Magistrate of the first class, considers that any unlawful obstruction or nuisance should be removed from any thoroughfare or public place, or that any trade or occupation, by reason of its being injurious to the health or comfort of the community, should be suppressed or should be removed to a different place, or that the construction of any building, or the disposal of any combustible substance, as likely to occasion conflag.ation, should be prevented, or that any building is in such a state of weakness that it is likely to fall, and thereby cause injury to persons passing by, and that its removal in consequence is necessary, or that any tank or well adjacent to any public thoroughfare should be fenced in such a manner as to prevent danger arising to the public—such Magistrate may issue an order to the person causing such obstruction or nuisance, or carrying on such trade or occupation, or being the owner or in possession of, or having control over, such building, substance, tank or well, as aforesaid, calling on him, within a time to be fixed in the order, to remove such obstruction or nuisance, or to suppress or remove such trade or occupation,

or to alter the disposal of such substance or to fence such tank or well, as the case may be, or to appear before himself or some other Magistrate of the first or second class within the time mentioned in the order and show cause why such order should not be enforced.

Order to be a judicial proceeding. The issue of an order under this section shall be a judicial proceeding, whether or not evidence is taken therein.

Order to be in the alternative. Such order may be issued on a report or other information which the Magistrate believes, and shall direct the person to whom it is addressed, either to obey it, or to show cause why it should not be obeyed. The order shall not be made absolute, except as is hereinafter provided, until opportunity has been given to the person affected to show cause.

Explanation.—A "public place" includes property belonging to the State, camping grounds, and grounds left unoccupied for sanitary and recreative purposes.

CHAPTER XX.

Of Local Nuisances.

Magistrate may order removal of nuisances. 308. Whenever the Magistrate of a District or of a Division of a District may consider that any unlawful obstruction or nuisance should be removed from any thoroughfare or public place, or that any trade or occupation, by reason of its being injurious to the health or comfort of the community, should be suppressed or should be removed to a different place, or that the construction of any building or the disposal of any combustible substance, as likely to occasion conflagration, should be prevented, or that any building is in such a state of weakness that it is likely to fall, and thereby cause injury to persons passing by, and that its removal in consequence is necessary, or that any tank or well adjacent to any public thoroughfare should be fenced in such a manner as to prevent danger arising to the public, he may issue an order to the person causing such obstruction or nuisance or carrying on such trade or occupation, or being the owner or in possession of, or having control over such building, substance, tank, or well as aforesaid, calling on such persons, within a time to be fixed in the order, to remove such obstruction or nuisance, or to suppress or remove such trade or occupation, or to stop the construction of, or to remove such building, or to alter the disposal of such substance, or to fence such tank or well as the case may be, or to appear before such Magistrate within the time mentioned in the order and show cause why such order should not be enforced.

1. Legislative Changes.—

Changes introduced in 1872—

(1) After the words "division of a District" in the first paragraph the words "or when empowered by the Local Government in this behalf, a Magistrate of the first class" were added.

(2) At the end of the section (308 of 1861) for the words "before such Magistrate" the words "before himself or some other Magistrate of the first or second class" were substituted.

(3) The last two paragraphs and the explanation were newly added.

Changes introduced in the Code of 1882—

(1) The last paragraph of S. 521 of the Code of 1872 was omitted and as a consequence (a) after the word "considers" in para. 1 of S. 133 of the Code of 1882, the following words were added "on receiving a report or other information and on taking such evidence (if any) as he thinks fit".

(b) In para. 7, before the word "order" the word "conditional" was added.

(2) In the second para, for the word "thoroughfare" the words "way, river or channel, which is or may be lawfully used by the public" were substituted.

(3) In the third para, after the words "trade or occupation" the words "or the keeping of any goods or merchandise" were added, and before the word "comfort" the word "physical" was added. After the word "stopped" the words "or prohibited" were added.

(4) In the fourth paragraph for the words "combustible substance as likely to occasion conflagration" the words "substance as likely to occasion conflagration or explosion" were substituted; and after the word "prevented" the words "or stopped" were added.

(5) In the fifth paragraph, after the word "persons" the words "living or carrying on business in the neighbourhood" were added and after the word "removal" the words "repair, or support" were added.

(6) In the sixth paragraph, after the word "well", the words "or excavation" were added.

S. 133. Notes 1—2.

(7) In the seventh paragraph, additions consequent on the additions indicated above were made;

The "place" at which to appear was mentioned in the order.

For the words "show cause why such order should not be enforced" the words "move to have the order set aside or modified in manner hereinafter provided" were substituted.

(8) The last but one para. of S. 521 of the Code of 1872 was omitted.

(9) The last para. of the section corresponding to the present sub-S. (2) was newly added.

Changes introduced in 1898—

For the word 'report' in para. 1 the word "police report" was substituted in sub-S. (1) of S. 133 of the Code of 1898.

Changes made in 1923—

(1) In sub-S. (1), para. 1, the words "when empowered by the Local Government in this behalf" were omitted.

(2) In para. 3 before the words "any trade" the words "conduct of" were added and for the words "should be suppressed or removed or prohibited", the words "should be prohibited . . . regulated" were substituted.

(3) In para. 5, after the word "building" the words "tent or structure or any tree" were added and after the words "repair or support" the words "of such building . . . of such tree" were added.

(4) After para. 5, a new para. with regard to "any dangerous animal" was added.

(5) In para. 6, appropriate changes and additions of words consequential on the additions referred to above, were made

2. Remedies for a public nuisance.—See also Note 5 to S. 91 in the commentary on the Code of Civil Procedure by the same authors.

The remedies available in respect of public nuisance are as follows:—

Under the Civil Law—

(a) A suit will lie under S. 91 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and in such suit, it is not necessary for the plaintiffs to prove that they have sustained any special damage.

(b) A suit will also lie at the instance of a private individual where he had suffered special damage by reason of the nuisance.

Under the Criminal Law—

(a) The person committing a public nuisance will be prosecuted under Chapter 14 of the Indian Penal Code.

(b) The person committing the nuisance may be proceeded against in summary proceedings under Ss. 133 to 144 of this Code.

(c) The person committing the nuisance may be proceeded against under any other special or local law where a remedy is provided in such law against such nuisance.[1] S. 133, Note 2.

The remedies are concurrent and the pursuit of one does not bar the other. A proceeding under this chapter is therefore not a condition precedent to a prosecution under the Penal Code,[2] or to the maintenance of a civil suit.[3] Similarly the existence of an alternative remedy under the special Act does not oust the jurisdiction of a Magistrate to proceed under this chapter.[4]

The proceedings under this chapter are summary and are intended to enable Magistrates to summarily deal with cases of urgency or of imminent danger to public interest. They are not intended to enable a complainant to obtain, by this process any civil relief.[5] Therefore this very exceptional jurisdiction given in this chapter should be exercised with all possible fairness and reasonable precautions,[6] and should be so worked as not to become itself a nuisance to the community at large.[7]

It is not open to any member of the public to take the law in his own hands and demolish the building or other structure alleged to be a public nuisance without recourse to the proper authorities and without adopting the proper procedure prescribed by law.[8]

S. 133, Notes 3—4.

3. Scope and applicability of the section.—This section enumerates certain specific public nuisances and provides a summary remedy for their removal. It is an emergent section framed to deal with evils either existent or imminent and is applicable only to physical obstructions or nuisance which is capable of being removed and which is actually in situ. It could not be made use of to put a stop to and prohibit certain objectionable accompaniments to ceremonies practised by a religious sect to the discomfort and annoyance of their fellow townsmen.[1]

As the section is intended to provide a speedy remedy in the interests of the public, a Magistrate should be on his guard, against any tendency to use it as a substitute for litigation in Civil Courts for the settlement of a private dispute.[2]

The proceedings under this section are ex parte and a Magistrate commencing such proceedings should issue a conditional order in conformity with the section, and not issue a notice instead to show cause why action should not be taken.[3] As to the effect of the absence of such a conditional order, see the undermentioned case.[3-a]

The proceedings are more of the nature of civil than of criminal proceedings and a party to such a proceeding is not an accused person and there is nothing to prevent his being examined on oath, or prosecuted for an offence under S. 193 of the Penal Code.[4] But orders passed under this section are orders in criminal proceedings and no Letters Patent appeal lies therefrom.[5]

The section does not apply to private nuisances.[6] Further, a proceeding under this section is not the proper procedure to follow when there is a dispute between the Government and a private individual.[7] See Notes under S. 139-A.

3-A. Preventive action in respect of anticipated nuisance.—Except in the case of the construction of a building or the disposal of a substance which is likely to occasion a conflagration or explosion, this section only applies where the unlawful obstruction or nuisance is actually in existence and does not justify any action being taken in regard to an anticipated but non-existent obstruction or nuisance.[1]

4. Sections 133 and 144.—The essential difference between this section and S. 144, infra is that the former expressly states that the order passed should be only conditional (i.e.), that it is not to operate if the party shows cause, while an order under S. 144 is an order absolute. Where a case falls both under this section and S. 144, the order should, under this section, be a conditional one giving the party an opportunity to show cause against the order.[1] But where the case does not fall under this section, as where an order has to be passed prohibiting burial in certain places on sanitary grounds, it should be made under the more general provision, S. 144.[2] It was held in cases decided under the Code of 1861 that where an order could not be passed under S. 308 (corresponding to this section) an order could be passed S. 62 (now S. 144), provided the party is given notice to show cause.[2] Under the Code of 1872, it was held that the explanation 1 to S. 518 (S. 144) provided a speedy remedy when resort to S. 521 (S. 133) would be too slow, that the former section was merely ancillary to the latter section and that therefore it would not apply to cases where the latter would not apply.[4] In the absence of such an explanation in the present S. 144, it is doubtful, if the above decision is any longer law. S. 133, Notes 4—7.

5. Sections 133 and 147.—This section is not a bar to a proceeding under S. 147 where a case falls under both the sections. Thus the fact that this section provides for an order directing the removal of an obstruction to a pathway does not imply that an order cannot be passed under S. 147, when there is a likelihood of a breach of the peace in respect thereto.[1] But when proceedings are taken under this section, no order can be passed under S. 147. That section clearly states that the procedure shall be as under S. 145 which is entirely different from this section and is entirely for a different purpose.[2]

6. Who may act under the section.—Under the Code of 1861, only the Magistrate of a District or Magistrate of a division of a district could issue an order under this section.[1] So it was held that a Joint Magistrate while in charge of a District Magistrate's office could not act under the section,[2] though he may do so if he is already in charge of a sub-division.[3]

After the amendment of 1923, any first class Magistrate may act under this section, without being specially empowered in this respect by the Local Government.

It is however only the officers specified in the section that can make an order thereunder. A kurnam cannot therefore issue an order for the removal of an obstruction from a public way[4] nor can a third class Magistrate make any enquiry under this section.[5]

7. "Considers".—It is enough if the Magistrate has before him sufficient materials upon which prima facie he can act.[1] Where the acts complained of amount to a nuisance, it prima facie gives the Magistrate jurisdiction to pass an order under this section.[2]

8. "On receiving police report or other information".—A proceeding under this section is in the first instance ex parte, and the report or other information on which, it is based, is no evidence against the opposite party.[1]

9. "And on taking such evidence".—The expression on taking such evidence, "if any, as he thinks fit" does not make it incumbent on the Magistrate to hold an inquiry before he makes an order under this section.[1]

10. Unlawful obstruction.—There is no definition of the words "unlawful obstruction" and "nuisance" in this Code. But the words "public nuisance" are defined by S. 268 of the Penal Code and by virtue of S. 4, sub-S. (2), ante, that definition applies to this Code also.[1] According to that definition a person is guilty of public nuisance "who does any act or is guilty of an illegal omission which causes any common injury, danger or annoyance to the public or to the people in general who dwell or occupy property in the vicinity, or which must necessarily cause injury, obstruction, danger or annoyance to persons who have occasion to use any public right."

Any act or illegal omission which must necessarily cause obstruction to persons who may have occasion to use any public right is a public nuisance.[2] The present section deals, however, with unlawful obstruction of a particular kind, namely, those relating to any way, river or channel which is or may be lawfully used by the public, or any public place.[3] Obstruction to persons who may have occasion to use other public rights, though a public nuisance, cannot be dealt with under this section. Nor does the section apply to obstruction of private rights.[4]

The question whether there has been an obstruction is a question of fact which must be decided having regard to the facts and circumstances of each case.[5] The spreading of a branch of a tree 15 feet over a country road,[6] or the mere placing of a charpoy temporarily on a public road,[7] may not, having regard to the nature of the traffic, amount to an obstruction. On the other hand, the unlawful cutting up of a public road[8] or the filling up of a portion of a ditch or drain forming part of such road,[9] or the placing of erections thereon,[10] or the holding of a cattle market resulting in the driving of cattle to and from such market through narrow and congested public lanes[11] may amount to an obstruction. Similarly an obstruction in the channel of a public and navigable canal,[12] or an erection of a bund or dam obstructing the right of the public to cross the bed of the river easily and on foot[13] may amount to an unlawful obstruction and a nuisance. The High Court of Lahore has, in the undermentioned case,[14] however, held purporting to follow a decision of the Calcutta High Court[15] that any encroachment, however small, on a public road must inevitably result in obstruction to persons who may have occasion to use such road, and is therefore a public nuisance. The decisions relied upon in that case do not really support that view. It is submitted that the decision cannot be accepted as correct on principle.

In order, however, to constitute an act, an unlawful obstruction, it is essential, not only that the obstruction should be to persons who may have occasion to use any public right, but also that the obstruction should be an existing and not merely a future one.[16]

The section is not inapplicable merely because the motive for causing the obstruction is good[17] or the obstruction does not cause practical inconvenience to persons using such way[18] or the obstruction affords some convenience to the person causing it.[19] On the other hand, it must be remembered that the section is not intended to be employed to avoid the necessity of filing civil suits in regard to longstanding obstructions, but only for unlawful obstructions lately caused in public places and rendering their immediate summary removal necessary.[20]

A public road will comprise all the ground forming part of the road, whether metalled or not, over which the public have a right of way.[21]

11. Nuisance.—The second paragraph of the section deals with the removal of a nuisance from any way, river or channel which is or may be lawfully used by the public or from any public place. It is not necessary that the place where the nuisance originates should be a public place. It may be a private place and the act or omission may be an exercise of a right in respect of one's own property.[1] But the right to use one's own property as one likes is subject to the maxim sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas (so use your own property as not to injure the right of another): In Indra Nath Banerjee v. Empress, I.L.R. 25 Cal. 425, their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court observed: "We have no hesitation in saying that, in our opinion, a private proprietor may be guilty of acts done on his private property which may give rise to a public nuisance to those living in the neighbourhood. A private owner who fires off blank charges from a cannon in his compound may give rise to a public nuisance so far as regards persons riding or driving on a public way just outside the compound". The following are illustrations of cases where acts of private user may amount to a public nuisance:—

(1) Where a latrine is used in such a way as to amount to be a nuisance to the neighbours;[2]

(2) Where a burning ghat or ground is kept in such an offensive state or the cremation is carried on in such an offensive manner as to be a source of danger, injury, or annoyance to persons living in the vicinity;[3]

(3) Where a high wall is built with the result that there is no space to clear the drainage between it and the neighbour's house and there is consequent accumulation of filth[4];

(4) Where a cooking shop is conducted in such a manner or beef is cooked there under such circumstances as may cause annoyance to the public or the neighbours;[5]

(5) Where a person allows prickly pear from his land to spread on a road used by the public;[6]

In order, however, to constitute an act or illegal omission a public nuisance, it must, having regard to S. 268 of the Penal Code,—

(1) cause common injury, danger or annoyance to the public or to the people in general who dwell or occupy property in the vicinity, or

(2) be one which must necessarily cause injury, obstruction, danger, or annoyance to persons who may have occasion to use any public right.[8-a]

In cases coming under class 1, above, it is necessary to show that the act or the illegal omission actually causes injury, danger or annoyance to the public or the people in general who dwell or occupy the property in the vicinity.

It is not enough to show that the sentiments of certain persons or of a class of persons are offended by the act. The nuisance is lex non favet votis delicatorum (the law favours not the wishes of the dainty). In other words, the law makes no allowance for the susceptibilities of the hypersensitive.[9] So where certain Mahommedans for a religious purpose kill two cows in a private compound, only partly visible, it will not amount to a public nuisance.[10] But it was held that a person wilfully slaughtering cattle in a public street so that the slaughter could be heard and seen by the passers-by, would be committing a public nuisance.[11] Similarly, where a person cut up meat on his verandah and exposed it to the sight of persons passing along the road, it would not amount to a public nuisance merely because the sight would offend some Jains whose temple was close by.[12] So also a cremation held on a particular spot dedicated for that purpose[13] or the playing of music before a Mosque[14] or the making of noise by a Chowkidar for keeping thieves away[15] is not a public nuisance simply because it may annoy some people nearby.

In cases coming under class 2, above, it is not necessary to show that it has actually caused injury, etc. It is enough to show that the act is such as must necessarily cause the injury, etc. The High Court of Allahabad has, however, in the undermentioned case[16] held that in order to establish a charge of committing a public nuisance in a public place to the annoyance of residents or passengers in the locality, it is necessary to show that somebody was actually annoyed, though annoyance even to a single person is sufficient. The decision does not advert to the distinction between the two classes of cases specified in S. 268 of the Penal Code. It is submitted that the decision cannot be accepted as correct.

The question whether an act or omission causes or must necessarily cause injury, danger, or annoyance is one of fact which depends upon the circumstances of each case.[17] In Bamford v. Turnley,[18] Polloch, C.B., observed as follows:

"Most certainly, in my judgment, it cannot be laid down as a legal proposition or doctrine that anything which, under any circumstances, lessens the comfort or endangers the health or safety of a neighbour must necessarily be an actionable nuisance. That may be a nuisance in Grosvenor Square which would be none in Smithfield Market. That may be a nuisance at midday which would not be a nuisance at midnight. That may be a nuisance which is permanent and continual which would be no nuisance if temporary or occasional only. A clock striking the hour, or a bell ringing for some domestic purpose may be a nuisance if unreasonably loud and discordant of which the jury alone must be the Judge; but although not unreasonably loud, if the owner from some whim or caprice made the clock strike the hour every 10 minutes or the bell ring continually, I think that a jury would be justified in considering it to be a very great nuisance.....The compromises that belong to social life and upon which the peace and comfort of it mainly depend will furnish an indefinite number of examples in which some apparent natural right is invaded or some enjoyment abridged". Thus the bare solicitation of chastity[19] or the visiting of a prostitute to a Dak bungalow at the request of a person staying there,[20] or the letting of water on a public road[21] or gambling in a private place or in front of a Zamindary Cutcherry,[22] or mere angling in a tank,[23] or skinning an animal which dies a natural death[24] or the construction of a latrine on one's own land,[25] or the disposal of a corpse on a cremation ground or burning ghat set apart for the purpose[26] or allowing one's cattle or pigs to stray into other people's premises[27] or the building of a wall on one's own property[28] or the keeping of a cooking shop and cooking beef there[29] or using nightsoil as manure[30] or the selling of "satta" tickets in a shop along the road-side[31] may not, under the particular circumstances of a case, amount to a public nuisance. But the same facts under another set of circumstances may amount to a public nuisance. Thus the solicitation by prostitutes in open public place some of them carrying charpoys with them,[32] or gambling in the market place[33] or on a thoroughfare[34] or cultivating paddy in the bed of a tank used for drinking purposes by the public[35] or angling in a tank with a bait which is of a foul kind,[36] may, in a given set of circumstances, amount to a public nuisance.

The jurisdiction of a Magistrate to take steps to remove a public nuisance cannot be defeated merely because it has been carried on without complaint for many years. The reason is that no one can acquire a prescriptive right to commit a public nuisance.[37]

12. 'Channel'.—The word 'channel' is not defined in the Code but is quite wide enough to include a catchment area in the centre of which there is a watercourse, any interference with which, justifies an action under this section.[1]

It is doubtful if a field across which surplus water of the neighbouring lands used to flow into the tank is a 'channel' within the meaning of this section.[2]

13. "Which is or may be lawfully used by the public".—It is essential for the applicability of the section that the way, river, channel or place from which a nuisance is sought to be removed is one which is or may be lawfully used by the public.[1] An obstruction, etc., in respect of a private place is not within the section.[1-a] The fact that the Magistrate has taken action under S. 133 is, however, sufficient prima facie to show that he considered that the locus in quo is a public place.[2] On the passing of the conditional order under this section the party proceeded against may appear and claim under S. 139-A, infra, that it is not a public place and if, on enquiry, the Magistrate finds that there is reliable evidence in support of such claim, he should stay proceedings and refer the party to the Civil Court.

It is not necessary to give jurisdiction under this section that the way should be one which is generally used by the public. All that is required is that the way, etc., should be one which is or may be lawfully used by the public.[3]

Private property cannot be treated as public, merely because a section of the public have enjoyed permissible user over it.[4] Similarly, the fact that the residents of a particular village have a right to take their cattle across a field does not constitute the field a public way which is or may be lawfully used by the public.[5] But a way or a road may be established to be a public one where acts of user by the public are shown to have been acquiesced in by the owner of the land over which the way passes and those acts are of such a character as to warrant the inference that the owner intended to make over to the public the right to use the land as a public highway.[6]

14. "Public place"—Meaning of.—The expression "public place" has not been defined in this or in the Penal Code.

In Queen v. Wellard,[1] Grove, J., laid down that a public place "is a place where the public go, no matter whether they have a right to go or not" and this definition has been accepted by subsequent judicial decisions both in England and in India.[1-a] A place, in order to be public, must consequently be open to the public, i.e., a place to which the public have lawful access by right of permissive usage or otherwise.[2]

Where a place is dedicated to the use of the public, it is of course, a public place. But it is not necessary that the title to the place should be in the public. A place may be a "public place" though it is the private property of an individual. It will depend upon the character of the place itself and the use actually made of it at a particular time,[3] and there are questions of fact which depend on the evidence in each particular case.[4] Thus a well belonging to a private individual who allows the public to use the water for drinking purposes[5] will be a "public place". Similarly, a railway platform at a time when passenger trains arrive[6] or the goods yard of a railway station[7] will be a public place. But Railway land, not being a platform or yard to which the public have access is not a public place.[8] Nor is the verandah of a private house a public place merely by reason of the fact that it is accessible from a public street.[9] See also the following cases.[10]

Under the explanation to the section, a "public place" will include property belonging to the State camping grounds and grounds left unoccupied for sanitary or recreative purposes. The Explanation was first enacted in the Code of 1872 and gave legislative sanction to the decision in the undermentioned case[11] that land, the property of the State, designedly left unoccupied for sanitary or recreative purposes was a public place.

15. Trade or occupation injurious to the health or physical comfort of the community.—Before the amendment of 1923, it was held that the section only dealt with trades or occupations which are in themselves injurious to the health or physical comfort of the community and not with trades which in themselves were harmless, but in the conduct of which a public nuisance might be committed.[1] The addition of the words "conduct of" before the words "trade or occupation" now makes it clear that the section applies not only to cases where the trade or occupation is in itself injurious to the community, but also to cases where the conduct of the trade is injurious to the community.[2]

Where the manager of a bone mill permitted a large stock of bones to remain uncovered in the open for a long time with the result that it became rotten and emitted noxious smell, it was held that it was a nuisance as it materially interfered with the ordinary physical comfort of human existence.[3]

A noise made by the working of an engine in a factory or a mill is a serious nuisance if it is sufficient to prevent the neighbours from sleeping at night and from concentrating on their work during the day.[4]

The dwelling of a prostitute in a quarter inhabited by respectable persons cannot by itself be considered to be "injurious to the comfort" of the community and therefore a nuisance,[5] but the solicitation for immoral purposes by prostitutes with charpoys with them, on a public road and their remaining in open space in close proximity to the habitations of respectable citizens and the conduct of their occupation there will be injurious both to the health and physical comfort of the community and the public using the road.[6] The driving of cattle to and from a cattle market through very narrow and congested lanes, if it causes obstruction to the public and is a source of danger to human life is a trade or occupation injurious to the physical comfort of the community.[7] An order under this section can be made to prevent a discharge from a factory into a river of a noxious effluent which might be injurious to the health of the community which has right to the use of the water in such river.[8]

Inoculation for small pox is not by itself an offence, but where it is necessary to prohibit it in the interests of the public, proceedings may be taken under this section against the inoculator.[9] But where certain persons got their children inoculated for small pox, it was held that they could not be said to be carrying on any trade or occupation and that the section had no application.[10] The proprietor of a cremation ground cannot be said to be carrying on any trade or occupation within the meaning of this section.[10-a]

The following are not trades or occupation injurious to the health or physical comfort of the community:—

(1) The opening of a new market close to an old one, even if sometimes people are dragged from one market to the other.[11]

(2) Plying of rival steam launches even though in their rivalry people are taken on board from places other than jetties and from boats, much to the annoyance and danger to the public travelling in the launches.[12]

(3) Keeping a house of public entertainment.[13]

(4) Cultivation of maize, jowar or bajra within a short distance from the town.[14]

Where there is no effect on public health, the conduct of an occupation like a tannery[15] or a lime-kiln[16] or a brick-kiln[17] cannot be ordered to be stopped.

S. 133, Notes 15—17.

Though the legislature has under local or special Acts, left certain trades or occupations to the control of Local and Municipal Boards and provided remedies thereunder, the existence of such an alternative remedy does not deprive the Magistrate of jurisdiction to pass an order under this section. The Magistrate has jurisdiction to regulate the manner in which a trade is to be conducted and not be a nuisance to the community.[18]

But it is generally inexpedient for a Magistrate to take action in such cases and he will act wisely if he refers the party to set in motion the machinery provided in those local Acts.[19]

This section relates only to existing state of things and not to the possibility of future results. Therefore no order can be passed under this section on the possibility that the digging of pits for the purpose of brick making may, in the future, be injurious to the health of the community.[40]

16. Community—meaning of.—The meaning of the word "community" cannot be distinguished from the words "public" or "neighbours". Therefore an act found to be injurious to the physical comfort of the neighbours must be held to be so to the physical comfort of the community and comes under this section even though there may be some part of the community which is not affected.[1] But the interference with public comfort must be considerable and must be caused to a considerable section of the public.[2]

17. Building, tent or structure or tree.—An order can be passed under this section requiring a person owning, possessing or controlling a building, tent, structure or tree to prevent or stop the erection of, or to remove, repair, or support such building, tent or structure or to remove or support any tree that is likely to fall and cause injury to persons living or carrying on business in the neighbourhood or passing by.[1]

Before the amendment in 1923, the section dealt only with "buildings" and the expression "building" was held to indicate some structure whether roofed or not[2] intended to afford protection to the persons dwelling inside it or the property placed there for custody.[3] It was held not to include any other enclosure or structure.[4]

A "railway carriage" or "a brake van" is not a "building" within this section.[5]

The ground for taking action under this clause is that the building, etc., is likely to fall and thereby cause injury. The likelihood of a tree enabling thieves to get into a house is no ground for ordering the tree to be removed under this section.[6]

The section does not apply unless the danger or injury is an existing one.[7]

Again, in order to justify the taking of action under this section, the state of the building should be dangerous in presenti and not in futuro. In other words, it is the condition of things at the time when the inquiry is held that has to be looked to. If at such a time a building or a tree is likely to fall and thereby endanger the life of a passer-by, action under the section is justified. It is not meant to apply to what may happen at some indefinite time in the future or under quite abnormal circumstances.[8]

18. Persons living or carrying on business in the neighbourhood or passing by.—The persons who require protection under this section are persons living or carrying on business in the neighbourhood or passing by. It will not apply to persons living in the alleged dangerous house itself or in the servants' house in the compound. The words "persons passing by" will not include persons going to or from the house for their private business or pleasure in the exercise of their private rights. A Magistrate cannot therefore issue an order under this section to repair a house standing away from a public road in its own compound.[1]

19. Form of order.—See Schedule V, Form No. XVI.

An order under this section is only a conditional and not an absolute.[1] It should be in writing,[2] and should state the time within which, the Magistrate before whom and the place at which the person proceeded against may appear and move to have the order set aside.[3] It should not be a general order, but should be directed to particular individuals.[4] It must not be vague, but must be definite. Where the person against whom it is directed cannot learn from its terms what it is that he is to do for the purpose of complying with it, the order will be set aside as being vague and indefinite.[5] An order directing the demolition of a portion of a structure, must definitely point out and mark off how much of the structure should be removed.[6] Again, in a proceeding instituted against a number of persons it is essential that the order should state accurately with regard to each person, the specific obstruction made by him and which he is required to remove, unless it is alleged that all the persons are jointly responsible for all the obstructions.[7] The time specified in the order runs from the date of the order and not of the service on the person, and if it is served after the expiry of such time, the order is a nullity and all the consequent proceedings thereon are void.[8]

20. Directions in the order.—The section gives an exhaustive list of the matters in respect of which the Magistrate is empowered to pass orders.[1] It does not confer general powers to pass orders on any matter he may consider necessary.[2] Thus no order can be passed under this section directing a person to refrain from drinking the water of a certain well and to prevent others from drinking that water,[3] or not to cultivate certain lands beyond a particular spot,[4] or to construct a new drain in place of an old one,[5] or a new bund[6] or to build pig styes at a certain distance from the road,[7] or not to use a place as a cremation ground[8] or to allow a place to be used as a cremation ground[9] or to deliver custody of children.[10]

Again, an order under this section should direct the removal of an obstruction or nuisance or the doing of anything thereunder, only in the way specified therein and not otherwise.

Illustrations.

(1) Where the obstruction to a road was by a fence the order should be for removal of the fence and not of the house itself from which the fence was constructed.[11]

(2) Where a latrine is allowed to remain in such a condition as to be a nuisance to persons using a public place, the order should be to abate the nuisance and not to remove the latrine.[12]

S. 133, Notes 20—22.

(3) Where the nuisance is caused by the accumulation of filth and want of space to clear the drainage between a wall and the neighbour's house, the order should be to abate the nuisance and not to pull down the wall.[13]

(4) Where the nuisance is caused by a burning ghat, the order should be to remove the nuisance, i.e., take such steps, as would result in the cremation of corpses ceasing to be a nuisance and not to remove the ghat itself.[14]

(5) Where the cooking of beef in a cooking shop under certain circumstances or the manner in which the shop is conducted, is a nuisance, the order should be to abate the nuisance and not to order the shop to be closed.[15]

(6) While stopping a brick-kiln as being a trade or occupation injurious to the public, the order cannot direct the filling up of pits made for the purpose of making bricks.[16]

(7) Where the sparks from a forge might set fire to cotton stored in an adjoining factory, the order should be to so construct the forge as not to allow sparks to issue out of it and not to have the forge removed.[17]

(8) Even where a branch of a tree is likely to endanger human life, the order should not be to cut it down but to secure the safety of the public, by directing a proper support to be given so as to prevent the branch from falling.[18]

(9) In the case of a tank, well or excavation, the order should be to fence the same and not to order them to be filled up[19] or repaired.[20] But where the tank, becomes dry and people throw rubbish in it and it ceases to be any longer a tank, and becomes a public nuisance, it can be ordered to be filled up[21] and in such a case, the method of removing the nuisance should be left to the person proceeded against, and to order it to be done in a particular way, for example, by excavating it, is improper.[22]

21. "To appear before himself or some other Magistrate of the first or second class".—Under the Code of 1861, an order under this section could direct a person against whom an order was issued to appear only before the Magistrate who issued the order. But under this Code, the order may direct such person to appear before the Magistrate who issues the order, or any other Magistrate of the first or second class, except where the party demands a jury under S. 135, infra, in which case the matter can be disposed of only by the Magistrate issuing the conditional order and not by any other Magistrate.[1]

22. "And move to have the order set aside or modified".—An order under the corresponding sections in the Codes of 1861 and 1872 had to direct the party against whom the order was made "to show cause why the order should not be enforced" and on cause being shown, the Magistrate was empowered to let the matter drop.[1] Under the present section, an order has to direct the person proceeded against "to move to have the order set aside, or modified". The section thus contemplates that in suitable cases the order initially made may not only be set aside, but may be modified and the modified order be allowed to stand.[2]

A Magistrate does not act legally if he does not call upon the person with whose property he proposes to interfere to appear and show cause.[3]

23. "Order when to become final".—See Ss. 136, 137 and 139, infra.

24. Enquiry and finding.—See Ss. 137 and 139-A, infra.

24-A. Parties to order.—An order under this section binds the person against whom it is passed, and nobody else.[1] It has to be directed to a particular individual and cannot be addressed to the public in general.[2] (Compare S. 144 in this respect.)

25. Order, if a judicial proceeding.—Under the Code of 1861, it was held that an order under this section was a judicial proceeding.[1] The Code of 1872 specifically provided that it was a judicial proceeding.[2] Under the Code of 1882 and the present Code, any proceeding in the course of which evidence is or may be legally taken on oath is a judicial proceeding,[3] and will include an order under this section.

26. Effect of death of party on order.—Where the individual proceeded against under this section dies, the order must be considered spent and ceases to have further effect. If it is necessary to issue an order against the successor in interest, separate proceedings must be taken against him.[1]

27. Disobedience of order.—See Ss. 136 and 140, infra.

28. Jurisdiction of Civil Courts—Sub-S. (2).—Even before the provision corresponding to sub-S. (2) was introduced in 1882, it had been held by decisions that a Civil Court could not set aside an order duly made under this section.[1] The introduction of the said provision gave legislative effect to those decisions. The object of the provision is to enable Magistrates to make speedy orders and deal speedily with cases where a public nuisance has been committed.[2]

This bar is only applicable to a conditional order passed under this section but not to an order absolute which might be made under later sections in the absence of a clause similar to this in S. 140, infra.[3]

As to the maintainability of a suit for a declaration against any one of the public who claims to use the road or place as a public one, see S. 140, infra, and the following cases.[4]

As an order under this section cannot be questioned in any Civil Court, it ought to be passed sparingly and after great caution.[5]

29. Costs.—There is no provision for payment of costs by one party to the proceedings to the other and an order for costs is therefore improper.[1]

30. Further enquiry.—As a complaint under this section is not a complaint of an offence as defined in S. 4 (1) (h), supra, S. 436, infra, under which further enquiry could be ordered, will not apply to such a complaint and therefore any order for further enquiry into a matter coming under this section is ultra vires.[1] See further, Notes to S. 436, infra.

But there is nothing in law to prevent the Magistrate himself reviving a proceeding,[2] or drawing up fresh proceedings[3] under this section regarding the same matter which had been previously dropped, provided there are materials before him on which he could act.

31. Revision.—A High Court has undoubtedly jurisdiction to entertain a revision on grounds of fact, but this power will be sparingly used and the rule on which it will so act is that it will interfere where, either there is no evidence to support the finding or where the finding arrived at is perverse or such as no reasonable man could have arrived at on the evidence produced.[1] But a person invoking the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court is bound,

S. 134, Notes 1—5.

1. Legislative changes.—The words "in manner herein provided for service of a summons" were newly added in S. 134 of the Code of 1882. This section and S. 134 of the Code of 1882 are similarly worded.

2. "Person."—The word "person" includes any company or association or body of persons whether incorporated or not.[1] It can, therefore, include all the male adult residents in a certain mohalla.[2]

3. "Herein provided for service of a summons."—Ss. 69 to 71, supra, lay down the procedure for service of summons. An order under S. 133 should also be served in the same manner. Thus it cannot be affixed as provided by S. 71 unless it is found that it cannot be served as provided by Ss. 69 and 70.[1]

3-A. "If such order cannot be so served."—It is only when an order cannot be served in the manner provided for the service of summons that a proclamation under sub-S. (2) can be resorted to. Thus where the person to be served cannot be found, an attempt must be made to serve the order on some adult male member of his family (S. 70) or to fix it on some conspicuous part of his house. It is only when either of these courses is not possible that a proclamation must be issued.[1]

4. Whether mere knowledge without service sufficient.—Where the parties affected have information of the order issued under S. 133, it is immaterial that the mode in which it is brought to their notice is not in strict accordance with law.[1]

5. Whether defect in service or proclamation curable by S. 537.—This section is only directory and an omission to follow the direction given therein is an irregularity curable by S. 537, provided the person or persons affected had actual knowledge of the order issued under S. 133 and could have defended themselves under S. 135.[1]

Person ordered shall obey or may claim a jury.

523. The person to whom such order is issued shall be bound, within the time specified in the order, to obey the same, or to appear before the Magistrate before whom he was required by the order to appear and show cause as aforesaid; or he may apply to such Magistrate for an order for a jury to be appointed to try whether such order is reasonable and proper.

S. 135, Notes 1—5.

1. Legislative Changes.—

(1) There is no material difference between the Codes of 1872 and 1882 in this respect.

(2) The words "and in the manner" have been added in Cl. (a) by the Amending Act of 1923.

2. Scope of the section.—This section enables a party against whom an order under S. 133 is made to do any of the following things:—

(a) Obey the order, or

(b) Appear and show cause against the order, or

(c) Demand a jury to consider whether the order by the Magistrate is reasonable and proper.[1] The reason is as the proceedings under S. 133, are ex parte in the first instance, an opportunity is given under this section to the party against whom the conditional order is made to contest the validity of the order.[2]

3. "Appear and show cause"—Clause (b).—It is open to the party who is ordered to remove the obstruction to appear before the Magistrate who issued the order or before the Magistrate before whom he is asked to appear under S. 133, and show that the order ought not to be made absolute. If he does so, such Magistrate should proceed under S. 137, infra.[1]

4. Bona fide claim of right.—See S. 139-A.

5. Application to appoint a jury.—The third alternative open to the person who has been served with a conditional order under S. 133, is to demand a jury, to try whether the order passed by the Magistrate is reasonable and proper. Before the Amending Act of 1923 it was held that a party cannot both show cause and also apply for the jury at the same time.[1] Under the new S. 139-A, such party can now set up a private claim and if the Magistrate finds that there is no reliable evidence to support that claim, he can still apply for a jury under this section.[2] The application for jury must be in writing and stamped under Sch. II of Art. I of the Court-Fees Act. S. 135, Notes 5—11.

6. To whom application for jury is to be made.—Under S. 133 a District Magistrate, a Sub-Divisional Magistrate or a Magistrate of the First Class may make a conditional order and direct the party to appear before him or some other Magistrate of the first class or second class and have the order set aside or modified. But if a jury is demanded by such party the application can be made only to the Magistrate who made the conditional order. The Magistrate to whom the case is sent under S. 133 has no jurisdiction to entertain such an application.[1]

7. Duty of the Magistrate to whom an application for jury is made.—See Ss. 138 and 139-A, infra.

8. Power of jury under this section.—The only purpose for which a jury is appointed is to try the question whether the order of the Magistrate is reasonable and proper.[1] Thus the jury is not to decide on questions of bona-fide claim of right as, for example, whether the place is a public or private one.[2] A jury appointed under S. 138 can decide the question whether the order is reasonable and proper only after taking evidence. See S. 139, infra.

9. Finding of jury—Effect of.—If the party who is served with a conditional order under S. 133, applies for the appointment of a jury under this section and the jury submits its finding, it is not thereafter open to the party to set up a bona-fide claim of private right in him. He must be taken to have abandoned and waived that right.[1] See also S. 139-A, infra.

10. Effect of non-appearance and failure to obey the order under S. 133.—See S. 136.

11. Revision.—An order made under this section can be revised by the High Court under S. 439, read with Ss. 435 and 423 (1) (c).[1] But a Sessions Judge has no jurisdiction under S. 437 to order further enquiry where a Magistrate abstains from further proceedings on the ground that the order under S. 133 is not reasonable and proper.[2]

(CODE OF 1861—S. 311.)

311. If the person to whom the order mentioned in section 308 is issued shall not obey such order, or show cause against the same as hereinafter provided, or petition for a jury within the time specified in such order, he shall be liable to the penalty prescribed in that behalf in section 188 of the Indian Penal Code.

Procedure in case of disobedience or neglect by party ordered.

S. 136, Notes 1—4.

1. Scope of the section.—Where a Magistrate lawfully makes a conditional order under S. 133 and the same is served or notified as prescribed by S. 134, the person against whom the order is made is bound to do one of the things specified in S. 135. If he fails to do so a conclusive presumption arises under this section that the conditional order was correctly made and accordingly is to be made absolute. He also becomes liable to the penalty prescribed by S. 188 of the Penal Code. The whole object of Chapter X is to enable the Magistrate to make speedy orders and deal speedily with cases where a public nuisance has been committed.[1] The provisions of this section are consequently stringent the intention of the law being to create facilities for conditional orders becoming final without needless delay and thereby promptly to ensure public safety.[2]

2. "If such person does not . . . show cause".—This section has no application where the person against whom an order under S. 133 has been made, appears and shows cause under S. 135. In such a case the Magistrate must only proceed under S. 137 and cannot make the order absolute under this section.[1]

3. "He shall be liable to the penalty . . . S. 188".—The failure to act in accordance with S. 135, ante is a non-compliance with the law and not a disobedience of any order such as is contemplated by S. 188 of the Penal Code. The intention of the law is, however, to treat such non-compliance as a contempt of authority and to make it punishable and consequently it is specifically provided that the person failing to act according to S. 135 shall be liable to the penalty prescribed by S. 188 of the Penal Code.[1a] No notice is necessary to be given to the person not complying with S. 135, before he is prosecuted therefor.[1]

Where, the order under S. 133 is made absolute on the failure to comply with S. 135, a disobedience of such order is clearly within S. 188 of the Penal Code. In such a case, however, it is necessary that, under S. 140, infra a notice should be given to the person that in case of disobedience of the order within a time fixed by the Court, he will be liable to the penalty under S. 188 of the Penal Code.[2]

Disobedience of the Magistrate's order cannot be held to take place till after the expiry of the term fixed in the order for carrying it out.[3]

4. "Shall be made absolute".—The object of the section being, as has been seen already in Note 1, ante, to deal speedily with cases where a public nuisance has been committed, a conditional order, should, if the person against whom it was made, does not act in compliance with S. 135, be made absolute as early as possible after the date fixed for his appearance. Where a conditional order was made against a person fixing the 14th of August, 1916, for his appearance and he failed to appear or to obey the order, but nothing further was done till 11th September, 1920, it was held that it was improper to revive the proceeding in 1920, and that if there was a nuisance in 1920 the proceeding should have been commenced de-novo under S. 133.[1]

5. Invalid order, when can be questioned by party concerned.—Where a Magistrate is lawfully empowered to make an order under S. 133 and makes an order, and the person against whom it was made does not act in any one of the ways specified in S. 135, it will be conclusively presumed under this section that the order was correctly made and such person cannot, in future proceedings against him, question the same.[1] But where a Magistrate has no jurisdiction or is not empowered to pass the order at all, a failure to act in the manner prescribed under S. 135, will not, where a prosecution is instituted against such person under this section, disentitle him from questioning the validity of the order.[2]

6. Power of Court to set aside ex parte order.—It has been held by the High Court of Patna in the undermentioned case[1] that there is no express provision in the Code for setting aside orders absolute made ex parte but that on general principles Courts are entitled to set aside such orders, if they are satisfied with the reasons given for the absence of the party. See also S. 561-A, infra for a fuller discussion.

It was also held in the same case that when an ex parte order absolute is set aside and cause is shown against the conditional order, the Magistrate should proceed to record evidence as provided by S. 137 and that it is only thereafter that the Magistrate could make the order absolute or drop the proceedings.
